Fiscal '87 deficit runs $20 billion over target

By STEVEN KOMAROW
The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The deficit in the new budget year starting this fall will exceed the legal target by nearly $20 billion, and could require new across-the-board slashes in spending by government agencies, according to a report released Tuesday.

The report issued jointly by the Office of Management and Budget and Congressional Budget Office estimated that the deficit in fiscal 1987 would be $163.4 billion, requiring $19.4 billion in spending cuts to reach the $144 billion deficit target for fiscal 1987 under the Gramm-Rudman deficit-reduction law.

The report would serve as the blueprint for automatic spending cuts if Congress restored enforcement powers under the Gramm-Rudman Act, authority which was voided earlier this year by the Supreme Court. Congress also could vote to impose the cuts even without an automatic trigger scheme, subject to presidential veto.

Democratic and Republican leaders alike have vowed to reduce the deficit to within the $10 billion of the Gramm-Rudman target, the point at which the automatic cuts are required.

But Tuesday's report reflected the fact that Congress has so far failed to enact any of the money-saving features of the budget for fiscal 1987, which takes effect on Oct. 1.

If Gramm-Rudman were restored beginning in October, for example, the Pentagon would have to cut its spending by half the total cut required, $9.7 billion, or 5.6 percent of the defense budget, and domestic programs would have to be slashed by 7.6 percent to absorb the other $9.7 billion.

Civil Service and military retirees would lose their cost-of-living raises for the second straight year. However, the law protects Social Security recipients from the cutbacks, along with major poverty programs and veterans compensation.

Since interest payments on the national debt also are exempt from cuts, all of the spending reductions would have to be taken from less than 40 percent of the total budget, the report said.

Whether to impose the cuts, and how that would be done, will be a major issue when Congress returns from its recess on Sept. 8.

The Senate, at the urging of Gramm-Rudman supporters, twice endorsed restoring the automatic budget-cutting features struck down by the high court on constitutional grounds, and the issue is before a House-Senate conference committee.

The Supreme Court in July ruled that the original automatic mechanism violated the Constitution's separation of powers doctrine, because an officer of Congress, the comptroller general, would have authority to order the executive branch to make the cuts.

The new Senate-passed scheme would have the president's budget director issue the final cutback order.

House Democrats, wary of giving one of Reagan's appointees new powers, were able to temporarily block the legislation just before the recess.

The Democrats said they prefer to operate under a backup provision that would require both chambers to ratify the cuts and President Reagan to sign the resolution before the cuts could take effect.

The cuts announced Tuesday would be the second under Gramm-Rudman.

Weather on side of blazes

Heat, dry lightning return on Tuesday

By The Associated Press

A dip in temperature and some humidity improved the situation only briefly for the army of firefighters struggling to contain stubborn blazes ravaging Northwest forests, as heat and dry lightning moved in again Tuesday evening.

"The relief was short-lived," said Dave Damron of the federal government's Boise Interagency Fire Center. "Now it's back to plain old basic firefighting."

About 18,000 men and women, including about 3,500 in Idaho, were working to contain flames still out of control over more than 88,000 acres in seven Western states, BIFC spokeswoman Anne Jeffery said. More than 80,000 acres of the active fires were in Oregon and Idaho.

"We're making progress," BIFC spokesman Lee Poague said. However, "The progress is mainly through the people on the line. The fire bosses say they are satisfied with the progress they've made without any help from the weather."

Since Aug. 1, 710,685 acres have been burned in the Northwest, including almost 417,000 since the most severe of a series of lightning storms flashed through the region Aug. 10.

Approximately 8,000 lightning strikes scored 11 Western states on Monday, down significantly from the average of 40,000 per day during the past week, BIFC spokesman Dave Damron said.

"The unfortunate thing about those 8,000 strkes is they were mostly in Colorado, Wyoming and Montana, so we have a bunch of new fire starts," he said.

Jeffery said 147 new fires were reported Monday and early Tuesday in the 11 Western states, mostly through lightning strikes.

Weather conditions for firefighting, while encouraging for the next two days, were expected to deteriorate once again later in the week, Damron said.

Nearly third of 9th, 10th graders not making 'Cs'

By JANE ROBISON
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Nearly a third of all ninth and 10th grade students in Idaho failed to make an average grade of "C" or better and will not be allowed to graduate in 1988, unless the state changes its controversial rule.

A survey just released by the state Department of Education found that out of nearly 28,000 ninth and 10th graders throughout Idaho, 30 percent were making below the C average in the core subjects of English, math, reading and speech. Only 6-8 percent were actually failing, said Gus Hein, assistant state superintendent.

The result could be a smaller graduating class of 1988, Hein said. And educators around the state are lobbying to get it changed.

"I think parents ought to get up in arms about this," said Twin Falls Superintendent Carl Snow. "Parents have been told, but it hasn't sunk in yet."

In Twin Falls, 130 sophomore students out of 500, or 26 percent, were making D's or F's in one of the core subjects, Snow said.

The C-average rule imposed by the state Board of Education is an example of a good idea gone awry, educators say.

To try and force students to master the basics, the state Board of Education in 1984 decided that students would not receive a high school diploma if they failed to meet the minimum graduation requirment of C or better in the basic subjects.

The rule becomes effective for the graduating class of 1988, meaning that students who were sophomores last year, who cannot bring their grades up before 1988, will be denied high school diplomas.

School superintendents banded together last year to fight the rule. They argued that it would lead to a higher dropout rate, inflated grades by teachers to bring lower students up, or a watering down of the curriculum.

State Superintendent of Public Instruction Jerry Evans recommended last September to the state board that it alter the C-average rule, but the board turned him down, saying the rule has not had a chance to work, Hein said.

The state Board of Education will meet again in September, but Hein said the Department of Education will not be making any recommendations, despite the evidence that it is not working.

"Basically, we're going to ask them what they want to do about it," he said.

The only way a student can pass is to either take the class over, or make an A or B in one of the other core subjects. However, Snow said students who do poorly in one subject are not likely to excel in another.

"There's always going to be a certain amount of kids who are below average, and what this rule does is eliminate students at the lower level," he said. "I just don't think you should pass a rule telling students they can't be successful. You need to give them another way to succeed."

The questionnaire sent to all junior high and high school principals in the state asked educators what should be done to bring up students' grades.

Of the 137 principals who answered the survey, a majority said "throw the rule out," Hein said.

The other answer given most often by principals and superintendents was for the state to give more money to education, so that more remedial classes could be added, Hein said.

Additional sanctions unlikely

By SUSANNE M. SCHAFER
The Associated Press

SANTA BARBARA, Calif. (AP) — President Reagan is expected to renew his sanctions against South Africa next month, but there are no plans at present to take additional measures against the white-ruled regime as demanded by Congress, the president's chief of staff said Tuesday.

Donald T. Regan, in California with the vacationing president, added that the administration was leaving the door open "a little bit" to taking new steps against South Africa.

President Reagan, the chief of staff emphasized, "thinks additional sanctions would not be the right way to go."

Reagan faces severe pressure from Capitol Hill on the issue after the Senate gave overwhelming approval to a package of sweeping economic sanctions that go beyond Reagan's milder steps. Those sanctions, contained in an executive order, are due to expire on Sept. 9.

Regan told reporters in an impromptu interview that additional sanctions, beyond those imposed last year by Reagan, are unncessary at the moment because the South Africans have "gotten the message" that the United States is seeking an end to apartheid.

"Whether additional sanctions will put more heat on them is a debatable question," Regan said.

"As far as additional sanctions, we have no plans at the current moment," the chief of staff said. "We have no plans at this moment to add any sanctions to what we are going to do on Sept. 9."

Asked whether he intended to leave the door open to additional steps, Regan replied: "We don't slam the door on every possibility. I left the door open a little bit."

But he added that he does not

Bid to oust Pakistan's Zia falters

The Associated Press

ISLAMABAD, Pakistan — A drive to oust President Mohammad Zia ul-Haq faltered on Tuesday, and police charged four opposition leaders with murder in connection with the rioting that killed at least [illegible] people in the past week.

Police said the four officials of the Pakistan People's Party were charged with firing on a march by government supporters in the eastern city of Lahore last Thursday, killing four of them.

The police report named Jahangir Badir, party president in Punjab province; party spokesman Salman Taseer, and Malik Hakmeen Khan and Sayed Nasim Ali Shah, senior party leaders. Shah and Khan were arrested earlier. Taseer and Badir are in hiding following a government political crackdown last week.

But a nationwide, anti-government campaign appeared to be faltering Tuesday as calls for protests attracted small turnouts.

The Movement for the Restoration of Democracy, an alliance of 11 opposition parties, mounted the drive to depose Zia and force elections. Zia, on a Moslem pilgrimage to Mecca, is expected home Friday.

Police again fought protesters Tuesday.

Scattered rioting was reported in southern Pakistan. Riot police and paramilitary ranger units tear-gassed and clubbed protesters who attacked government buildings, burned banks and businesses and blocked road and rail traffic, according to official reports and witnesses.

USSR hints it will accept on-site military inspections

STOCKHOLM, Sweden (AP) — The Soviet Union told the 35-nation Stockholm security conference Tuesday that it is prepared to accept mandatory on-site military inspections.

Soviet Ambassador Oleg A. Grinevsky's remark, "We could ... agree to the conduct of on-site inspections," was regarded as a breakthrough at the start of the final session of the 32-month-old talks.

Grinevsky and U.S. chief delegate Robert L. Barry agreed in opening statements Tuesday that a document should be ready for the session's Sept. 19 deadline. Barry expressed hopes for an "comprehensive agreement."

In Washington, State Department deputy spokesman Charles Redman said the United States welcomes Grinevsky's public acknowledgment that on-site inspection of military activities is an essential component of any agreement.

"The United States and its allies have maintained that an effective verification regime, including on-site inspection, must be an integral part of any Stockholm agreement," he said.

A Western diplomat said a Soviet turnaround on the on-site control issue could have "heavy implications" for other East-West disarmament talks and could be meant to lend impetus to such talks.

A negative note, however, was sounded later by Grinevsky at a news conference.

He was replying to a question about initial U.S. rejection Monday of Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev's calls for a joint nuclear test moratorium.

Grinevsky said if Gorbachev's proposal was being rejected because it was considered Soviet propaganda, it would be "extremely negative for all international life, the Soviet-U.S. bilateral relations, and all possible movement forward in any talks."

The Western delegate, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said the Soviet policy change on mandatory on-site inspections indicated a new "openness" on the issue of military activities.

On-site inspection proposals advanced at the conference specified that one country could demand access to another's territory, on a limited quota basis, to check on unannounced troop movements.

Grinevsky told the news conference the Soviet Union would not refuse inspections under an agreement.

"Until the quota has been used up, we would have to accept them," he said.

When the conference opened in January 1984, then Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei Gromyko said demands for on-site inspection were only "an excuse to peek through the neighbor's fence."

The aim of the conference is to agree on confidence-building measures to lessen the risk of war in Europe. It brings together the United States, Canada and all European countries except Albania.

Grinevsky told the news conference the Soviets would be prepared to accept one or two mandatory inspections per year, but he rejected proposals that all troop movements outside of garrisons would be open to checks.

Fire

degrees cooler and higher humidity on Tuesday, forecast thunderstorms were expected to bring plenty of lightning but little rain, "which is what we really need," he said.

Much of the Idaho firefighting effort was focused in the Garden Valley area of the Boise National Forest, about 40 miles northeast of Boise.

The Anderson Creek fire complex there grew by about 4,300 acres on Monday to more than 15,000 acres when an inversion of smoke lifted, allowing winds churned by 100-degree midday heat to carry the fire across bulldozed lines into heavy stands of timber, Jeffery said.

The fire still was considered 50 percent contained on Tuesday. But the air inversion had returned, blanketing west-central Idaho valleys with a layer of dense smoke that kept air tankers and helicopters grounded, forest spokesman Ron Sanow said.

In all, 3,400 firefighters were battling six major blazes in the Boise National Forest, including the 2,200-acre Garden Valley complex, which was considered 90 percent contained, Sanow said.

After more than two weeks of intense firefighting, officials were being forced to deal with another consequence of the blazes: exhaustion.

"They're recognizing the fatigue factor setting in," Sanow said. "It's more and more prevalent every day."

He said about 340 firefighters were being allowed from 24 to 36 hours of rest and relaxation at a nearby youth camp before being reassigned to the fires. Other crews would be rotated through the facility as soon as possible, Sanow said.

Further to the northeast, 29 fires scattered throughout the sprawling Frank Church-River of No Return Wilderness were being allowed to burn naturally, said Kathy Pollock, spokeswoman for the Forest Service's regional office in Ogden, Utah.

The fires, which already had blackened more than 30,000 acres of rugged wilderness timberland, were being monitored to ensure they do not leave the wilderness or threaten private structures, Pollock said.

To the west, Nezperce National Forest spokeswoman Mary Zabinski said two wildfires encompassing almost 6,000 acres were ripping unchecked through the Hells Canyon Wilderness area, between the Salmon and Snake rivers along the Idaho-Oregon border.

Those fires also were classified as "wild," but because of a lack of manpower were being allowed to burn within natural barriers, Ms. Zabinski said.

However, flames burning to the rim of Hells Canyon, North America's deepest river gorge, were sending rocks tumbling into the Snake River. Ms. Zabinski said boaters on the river were being advised to moor their craft on the Oregon side.

Scholar wins stay of order

NEW YORK (AP) — An immigration judge Tuesday granted a three-day stay to an imprisoned Japanese student fighting expulsion from the United States for allegedly lying about being a communist in the 1960s.

Judge Howard Cohen's order means Choichiro Yatani, 40, who has lived in this country nine years, cannot be expelled until Saturday, said lawyer Arthur Helton.

Helton, of the Lawyers Committee for Human Rights, said he would file a federal lawsuit today challenging the revocation of Yatani's visa and ask that Yatani be freed immediately.

Yatani, who denies involvement with any communist group, was imprisoned July 7 as he sought to reenter the country from a trip to Europe.

Utah senator, businessman locked in close Demo race

The Associated Press

Utah's only black state senator was locked in a close race with a businessman Tuesday in a Democratic primary to choose a nominee for an underdog campaign against Sen. Jake Garn.

In Wyoming, Casper lawyer Mike Sullivan won the Democratic nomination to succeed Gov. Ed Herschler, who is retiring amid financial problems. Pete Simpson, former University of Wyoming vice president, led a seven-man Republican field.

With 46 percent of Utah's precincts reporting, real estate salesman Craig Oliver led with 7,603 votes or 51 percent over state Sen. Terry Williams, who had 7,329 votes or 49 percent. However, much of the missing vote was from Salt Lake County, the state's most populous, where Williams was expected to do well.

The winner will face Garn, a popular two-term Republican who chairs the Senate Banking Committee and who flew on the space shuttle last year.

With 30 percent of Wyoming's precincts reporting, Simpson, brother of Sen. Alan Simpson, had 6,665 votes or 29 percent, followed by Bill Budd, former executive vice president of the Wyoming Mining Association, who had 6,159 votes or 27 percent. Also in the race were former state House Speaker Russ Donley; Jim Bace, a Cheyenne computer programmer with no political experience; John Johnson, a Saratoga dentist; former state Sen. Dave Nicholas; and Fred Schroeder, Wyoming's National Republican Committeeman.

recommend at present that the president take further steps.

At another point, Regan said, "The executive order will probably be renewed on its own."

Reagan's rather modest sanctions included a ban on the sale of South African Kruggerands in the United States and limits on the sales of certain computers and other technology to South Africa.

While the House approved a measure that imposes a nearly total trade ban, the Senate bill was far less strict but it did include additional economic sanctions. Both houses passed their bills by margins far greater than those required to override a presidential veto.

White House spokesman Larry Speakes indicated last week that Reagan is expected to renew the limited sanctions imposed last year, and possibly invoke new ones.

"The question is whether he will add additional sanctions to the sanctions," the White House spokesman told reporters on Friday.

ATI asks state's high court to bar November lottery vote

BOISE (AP) — The Associated Taxpayers of Idaho has asked the state Supreme Court to stop the lottery initiative from appearing on the November ballot.

The group, which represents many of the state's businesses on tax matters, claims voter approval of the initiative would violate the Idaho Constitution's ban against a lottery.

The taxpayers organization filed its request for a so-called writ of prohibition Aug 14. If granted, the writ would prevent Secretary of State Pete Cenarrusa from putting the initiative on the ballot.

Associated Taxpayers President Russ Westerberg said the group took no stand on the lottery itself, but was concerned about the dangerous precedent that would be set if the constitution could be changed by initiative, which he said should be settled before the election.

Westerberg said otherwise, Idaho voters wishing to express their views on the lottery would be prevented by the courts and thus "have forfeited their opportunity to inquire of, and cast their vote for, legislative candidates whose position on the lottery was in harmony with their own."

The Supreme Court said it would give interested parties until Aug. 27 to respond, and may conduct a hearing on the issue Sept. 5.

If adopted and upheld by the ourts, the initiative would create a five-member commission that would decide the type of lottery and set the rules.

Carl Shell, a spokesman for "Vote Yes" For Idaho's Economy Committee, which supports the initiative, said the group probably would fight the taxpayers' request.

"I'm quite sure we won't sit by idly and let them hit us between the eyes with this thing," Shell said.

Stanley Crow, a spokesman for Help Idaho Thrive, an opposition group, said he was not sure what stand his group would take on the taxpayers' request.

A number of lawmakers and private citizens started an initiative drive to put the issue on the ballot after this year's Legislature failed to do so. Senate President Pro Tem Jim Risch, R-Boise, said the people were not prohibited from creating a lottery, even though the constitution forbids the Legislature from adopting one.

In a brief filed with the Supreme Court, Stephen R. Thomas, a lawyer for the Associated Taxpayers, argued that the state's founding fathers did not want a lottery unless the constitution was amended. He said the 1911 constitutional amendment allowing the initiative did not envision the constitution being changed by initiative.

Thomas contends that other provisions in the constitution prohibit the Legislature from acting, including a ban against giving local governments the power to exempt property from taxation.

Cold spring halved cherry crop

BOISE (AP) — Idaho's sweet-cherry crop, damaged this spring by cold and wind, is down by half compared with last year.

Last summer, the state produced 2,200 tons of sweet cherries and utilized 2,100 tons for a total value of $2.1 million. That figure has dropped significantly this year, as has farm income from the cherries, officials predicted.

Idaho's production is about 2 percent of the nation's total, which makes it the United State's sixth-largest producer.

A frost that hit the Sunny Slope area near Caldwell in April, and cold and windy weather near Emmett that same month were largely responsible for the loses, farmers said.

John Williams, part owner of Williamson's Orchard at Sunny Slope, blamed frost damage for a harvest this year up to 50 percent below what it could have been.

Dick Symms, an owner of Symms Fruit Ranch in Sunny Slope, said his cherry crop also was below expectations, but what was harvested was of good quality. He estimated his apple crop would be 85 percent of last year's because of the cold.

Apples are the largest fruit crop in Idaho. The state produced 6.5 million tons in 1985. He said the peach and plum crops appear to be normal.

In the Emmett area, cherries escaped the frost but were damaged by cold weather and gusty winds that prevented proper pollination by bees.

The impact of this reduced crop on cherry prices was not known. Lee Stacy, manager of the Fresh Fruits and Vegetable Bureau at the state Department of Agriculture, said the low production would push prices up only if the cherry-producing states of Oregon and Washington state also reported low yields.

PCBs found in illegal dump

GRAND VIEW (AP) — High levels of PCBs were found in an illegal dump outside the Envirosafe Services Inc. former disposal site south of Bruneau, the Idaho Division of the Environment said.

Polychlorinated biphenyl levels of 3,400 parts per million and higher were measured in soil samples taken by ESI from one of two illegal dumps located about 500 feet north of the company's former dump site, said Steve Provant, state solid and hazardous-waste-section chief.

An Envirosafe employee discovered the two dumps about 20 miles south of Bruneau more than a week ago, Provant said.

The dumps are on Bureau of Land Management land that are grazed in the winter by cattle owned by Owyhee County Commissioner Don Davis of Bruneau.

The PCBs, considered cancer-causing, were leaking from the transformers and capacitators found in one dump and have been there since the late 1950s or early 1960s, Provant estimated.

Officials did not know who dumped the electrical equipment there.

Strike by Boise Cascade's force averted by agreement

BOISE (AP) — A strike by nearly 2,200 Boise Cascade Corp. workers was averted when negotiators for the company and the Lumber, Production and Industrial Workers union reached a tentative agreement on a new two-year labor contract.

The accord came only hours after the union's Western Regional Council in Portland announced Monday that members at 12 Boise Cascade mills in three Northwestern states narrowly had rejected a previous offer calling for cuts in wages and benefits.

"It was close," Lou Foruria, president of LPIW Local 2816, said of the approximately 1,100 votes cast by millworkers in Idaho, Oregon and Washington. He declined to say what the tally was. Rejection required only a simply majority.

Boise Cascade spokesman Doug Bartels said the proposed contract failed 598 to 537.

Foruria said one reason the prior offer failed was a Boise Cascade proposal to give four weeks' vacation to employees with 25 years on the job. Foruria said. Members believed the proposal was unfair to younger workers, he said.

In exchange for the four weeks, millworkers would have given up wages and benefits estimated by the union to total $2.87 an hour.

The package voted down was the second proposal made since June by Boise Cascade, which contends the concessions are necessary to stay competitive with other Northwest forest products companies. LPIW members voted by a 2-1 ratio in July to reject the first offer, which would have rolled back wages and benefits $2.85 an hour and put a cap of three weeks on all vacations.

Shortly after the Monday announcement of the vote on the second offer, LPIW officials sought further talks with the company, Bartels said. An understanding was hammered out, preventing a walkout Foruria said would have begun today.

Bartels said the restructured agreement reflects a vacation-benefits pattern that is developing among forest products companies in the Northwest.

Both men said the agreement extends four-week vacations to people with 20 or more years on the job. In exchange, workers would lose $2.85 in wages and benefits. Except for the vacation schedule, the offer is the same as the one workers turned down in July.

Foruria said Emmett workers would vote Wednesday. Results were to be telephoned to the Western Regional Council, which was to release combined tallies for all Northwest mills on Friday.

Unlike the previous agreements, the latest understanding carries the union's endorsement, Foruria said.

Toxic fumes clear out neighbors of nursery

COEUR d'ALENE (AP) — Kootenai County authorities evacuated a half-mile area around the U.S. Forest Service nursery in Coeur d'Alene Monday night as toxic fumes wafted through the area, causing eye irritation and sending seven people to the hospital.

The gases, used to kill microorganisms in the soil, were identified as methyl bromide and chloropicrin, or tear gas, by spokesmen for the Forest Service and Coeur d'Alene Fire Department.

The combination is considered highly toxic by Chemtrex, the national clearinghouse for chemical spill information.

"They said there's not anything we can do, just evacuate," firefighter Carnie McArthur said.

He said the occupants of about 200 homes around the nursery were moved to Coeur d'Alene High School.

Firefighters, police, sheriff's deputies and Idaho State Police officers assisted in the evacuation, he said.

Cleve Chatterton, an assistant nurseryman, said a contractor from Portland, Ore., had applied the chemicals to the 20-acre nursery grounds throughout the day.

The chemicals are injected into the ground as a liquid to kill organisms in the soil, then the surface is covered with an impervious tarp, he said.

The nursery grounds are treated every year, he said, adding that there were no problems encountered during Monday's application.

The contractor finished about 6:53 p.m. The first complaints were reported about 8 p.m.

Chatterton said the only explanation he had for the difficulties this year was the absence of a breeze to ventilate the fumes seeping around or through the tarp.

The U.S. is losing public relations war

The Reagan administration's immediate negative response to the latest nuclear testing moratorium proposal by the Soviet Union will certainly be exploited by the Soviets as evidence of Reagan's lack of commitment to the peace process.

Not many people in this country will take the Soviet appeal at face level. We all have too many years of experience with Soviet deceitfulness to think that the moves are as obvious as they seem.

Nonetheless, it is evident that in Mikhail Gorbachev, the Soviets have found a skillful individual who has put the United States on the defensive when it comes to the public relations war which both sides wage.

Repeatedly in the past few months, Gorbachev has scored public relations points by coming across as a moderate, progressive individual who is willing to lead his nation into a new era of peace with the United States.

The image has been developed on two fronts. One is in the arms control negotiations, in which the possibility of a settlement is larger now than at any time in the recent past. The other is in the nuclear testing moratorium.

On both issues, the Reagan administration has been hurt, both by Gorbachev's campaign, as well as by a nasty ongoing dispute over how the United States should respond.

Generally, the dispute is between the State Department, which favor cautious negotiation, and the Defense Department, which has taken a more hard line approach.

The upshot is that while Gorbachev makes pronouncements, the administration waffles and appears unwilling to meet the Soviets even part way.

That perception is growing and poses a potential danger for the administration, both among allies and at home.

Instead of dismissing Gorbachev's appeals as "propaganda," the administration could do a better job explaining to the American people why Gorbachev's overtures are inadequate.

If that's the case.

Reagan's political dominance a lesson

Jack Valenti

If Ronald Reagan's unprecedented dominance of the political arena in his sixth year in the White House is instructive in any way, it surely has to be a lesson in politics, lit with klieg lights, to everyone who contests for the 1988 nomination.

First, no one was ever elected to an office on strictly scientific considerations or logic. People vote viscerally, not intellectually. This is basic political grammar, and if one reaches for high office attended by other notions of what it takes, he will be blown away at the polls.

Second, if the Democratic candidates have judged Reagan to be without grasp of the business of government, they are climbing a very greasy pole. They mistake a leisurely approach to the details for a lack of understanding about leadership.

The president came to power because he demonstrated two great virtues: he had convictions from which he never recoiled — perhaps he swerved a bit, but never backed and filled — and he seemed to be a very nice guy. His enemies never really hated him, and his antagonists found him likable. These are not casual values to most Americans.

Too many candidates, to paraphrase the late Sir Ernest Benn, think politics is the art of looking for trouble, finding it whether it exists, diagnosing it incorrectly and applying the wrong remedy.

Politics, particularly the quest for the presidency, is maddeningly mysterious. It has little of Price, Waterhouse in it, and much of Merlin. To be politically attractive is the goal, but there are confused road markers obscuring the journey to that destination.

To present yourself to the voters with solidly held convictions, not about the niggly nooks and crannies of an issue, but a clear view of where you believe the country ought to be heading, and hold fast to those convictions no matter the pressures from this or that group to cause you to revise those presentations congenially, believably and maybe inspiringly — that is the thing. A fellow without convictions will be right only by accident. And ever since the TV remote control was invented, dullness is disaster.

Third, the great tragedy of presidential politics is that a beautiful theory is always killed by an ugly fact.

The sorry truth is there is no single solution, or perhaps any ready solution, to any of the great problems that challenge us right now. No one has the answer to the deficit, to arms-reduction talks, to the economy or health or crime or housing or race or jobs or education or how to cope with the changing face of the society. No one.

Of course, there are a lot of confident voices being heard, but while there is a binary impulse (something is either bad or good) you can't pin anyone down to a specific, detailed answer to any problem. When LBJ was president, he would be counseled by pundits who offered him grand concepts about global problems, and finally Johnson would throw up his hands and say, "You've convinced me you are right. Now what is the specific instruction I give to this government at 9 a.m. tomorrow?" "Well, now," the pundits would sputter, and LBJ would smile cagily.

The assembly of able and intelligent men who have arrived at the conclusion that they are suitably equipped to lead the country could do worse than ponder the legacy of Ronald Reagan.

None of the 1988 candidates at his time has a clear and superior lead. There is at best a misty haze over the field. Enter a conversation with any group and mount the question, "Who do you like in '88?" and the answers are pretty much the same.

Few have any zeal for any single candidate. Some they like more than others, but the passions are not heated, the emotions withheld. In the cities and on the farms, in the factories and around the malls are to be found the deeply committed and the bitterly alienated. The noises one hears from the crowds are diverse: timid, vulgar, astringent and appealing. No candidate has yet to reveal he hears or understands what they are saying.

The leader who can leap from the field is the one who offers his beliefs with some charm, and who engages and connects with an audience who doubtless will never talk to him in person and will know him only as a figure emerging from their TV sets. He must try not to bore them or to fool them.

He will from time to time confess he does not have the full answer to a question, and he will at all times stay on course, though his aides, his backers and those he wants to be his supporters will suggest taking a fork in the road.

He will become angry only when he is pushed too far, and he will not be vengeful. He will know where he is going, and he will demonstrate that gift of moral indignation that marks the man unafraid to say what he means and to believe what he says.

Perhaps the most striking summary of presidential political mastery is to be found in a cemetery in Caen, France, where on the tombstone of a young RAF fighter pilot is etched this inscription: "Leadership is wisdom, and courage, and a great carelessness of self."

Soviet account of Chernobyl will be fascinating document

Victor Gilinsky

At the end of this month, the Soviets are slated to present a public report on the Chernobyl accident to the International Atomic Energy Agency in Vienna. It promises to be a fascinating account, both for what it will and will not say about the accident itself, the radioactive contamination in the Ukraine and Byelorussia and the impact on the workings of the Soviet state. Of one thing we can be sure: the impact will be substantial.

Here's what to look for in the forthcoming report: First, do the Soviets have a convincing explanation of the "experiment" that is supposed to have gotten out of hand and started the accident? They mentioned an experiment early, but clammed up on this and other details soon after the accident.

Then, recently, they said the experiment involved a safety test of the plant's turbine generator. This sounds innocent enough, but why did it take so long for the story to surface? And why was a deputy minister at the Ministry of "Medium Machine Building" (read "Nuclear Weapons") one of those sacked after the accident?

The answer may lie in a story that comes out of Poland, by way of a Dutch business journal. The chairman of the Soviet Academy of Science is reported to have asked for tests of a higher enrichment fuel that the station manager is said to have opposed on safety grounds. Such fuel could improve plant performance.

But its use could also free up part of the reactor core for the production of weapons-usable plutonium. If this was the reason for nuclear-weapons ministry involvement, the Soviets are unlikely to acknowledge it.

The Soviets also have said practically nothing about the extent of radioactive contamination in the area surrounding Chernobyl. But the fact that they are building houses and schools for the 100,000 evacuees far from the accident area tells us that the government does not intend to return these people to their former homes.

The area is obviously contaminated by long-lived radioactive fallout from the accident, and it is impractical to clean it up. The guiding constraint on the return of the former inhabitants will be the radioactive dose acceptable for pregnant women, which is not very large.

I expect the Soviet standard will be about the same as our own — concern for children is universal. As a consequence, hundreds of square miles, and perhaps more, will likely remain off-limits for families for the indefinite future.

It now appears that more than the area around Chernobyl is affected. A recent story in a Beylorussian paper tells of tens of thousands of persons being checked for effects of radiation in the Krasnopolye region about 150 miles north of Chernobyl. The unsuspecting Byelorussians may have been doused by radioactive rain from the accident plume. Based on what was observed in Poland and Sweden, the fallout on the ground in Byelorussia could have produced a radiation level many hundreds of times greater than normal. If adequate precautions were not taken, some persons may have inhaled and ingested worrisome amounts of radioactivity.

Finally, it will be interesting to see what light is shed on the accident's impact on Soviet nuclear-energy policy. It seems from recent comments by Radio Moscow that there will be changes in policy and attitude on nuclear safety. For example, an Aug. 6 English language broadcast on energy included "man in the street" interviews with Soviet citizens, some of whom were outspoken in opposition to nuclear power.

One woman said that if the need for it was unavoidable, the reactors should be "in the desert or in outer space." Radio Moscow actually presented the Soviets' lesser dependence on nuclear energy, as compared with that of Western countries, as an advantage. The Soviet Union, we're told, was not rushing forward like some other countries but advancing deliberately. More attention will be paid to safety, and a new ministry has been put in charge of civilian nuclear development. The importance of conservation was stressed. ("We don't need to have lights on in the living room when we are watching TV in the bedroom.") While this is broadcast for Western consumption to make Soviet policy sound reasonable, it nevertheless suggests a rationalization of a nuclear-energy slowdown.

The accident's effects will reach beyond energy policy. The human pain, the dislocation of large numbers of people, the contamination of land, the loss of electrical generating equipment, the diminished standing of Soviet nuclear-energy experts, the residue of distrust abroad after the Kremlin's failure to warn neighboring countries — these will affect the Soviet scene for years. And the Soviets involved in coping with the accident had a bad fright they will not easily forget.

There are reports that the panic reached into the Kremlin. If that is so, the accident is bound to influence the Soviet leaders' thinking on the hazards of nuclear war — where confusion and consequences would be many times greater — and perhaps affected, too, confidence in Gorbachev's mettle. As for Gorbachev himself, it must have come as a shock to discover that the master of the Kremlin is hostage to the actions of obscure technicians in remote power plants.

Polk West ignored by all

This letter is to the City of Kimberly, Twin Falls County Highway Department and the Twin Falls County Commissioners.

As a concerned citizen and resident of Polk West in Kimberly, I am compiled to write with my concerns about Polk West. We residents feel that the city of Kimberly, Twin Falls County Highway Dept., have completely ignored Polk West.

We residents of Polk West were told that the city of Kimberly and Twin Falls County Hwy. Dept. would maintain the street. Twin Falls County Hwy. Dept. has not been down the street since they came and tore it up and put it into gravel.

The city of Kimberly has been down it once to grade it and place oil on the surface. Polk West is in the worst shape now than it was when it had pot holes. At least we could dodge the pot holes and still have our cars in one piece. Now when you travel over it, you and your car can have a free massage.

We would just like to see our city of Kimberly and Twin Falls County Hwy. Dept. people travel that street at least three or four times a day and see if they would put up with the condition of the street.

The thing that makes us the maddest of all about the street is the very people that drove down the street with heavy trucks 10 or more times a day and help break up the street are the ones that have the pavement right in front of their feedlot, and the resident on Polk West have to put up with the worst street in the city and county.

Come on city and county officials: You promised Polk West residents that it would be maintained and neither party have done their part. We residents pay our city and county taxes and we still have to put up with the worst street in town. We have driven around different county roads that were in bad shape this spring and they all seem to have been all resurfaced. Polk West has been completely ignored by all.

Idaho team clout prevails

History will record Frank Church, a liberal Democrat, and Jim McClure, a conservative Republican, as being the two most influential Idahoans of our time, with solid records of delivering for Idaho.

Although their names are synonymous with the opposite ends of the political spectrum, they have shared one thing in common: Power! Power that derives from the chairmanships of Senate committees, Church at Foreign Relations and McClure at Natural Resources and Energy.

Power is the real issue at stake in Election '86. For the first time in history, the West controls the Senate by virtue of committee chairmanships, with McClure at Energy; Garn of Utah at Banking; Hatch of Utah at Human Resources; Goldwater of Ariz. at Armed Forces; Domenci of N.M. at Budget; Packwood of Ore. at Finance; Hatfield of Ore. at Appropriations and Dole of Kansas as majority leader, all in a position to deliver for Idaho and the West.

Power is what politics is all about. Unfortunately, continuation of that power is contingent upon the Republicans retaining control of the Senate. If the Democrats should win all of our power is lost and the power reverts back to the liberal Democrats of the East.

I submit to you that a lot of good Republicans voted for Frank Church to re-elect him again and again and that a lot of good Democrats have voted for Jim McClure to re-elect him again and again; and that the power issue is bigger than either political party; and that the welfare of Idaho transcends the ideology, dedication and ambition of either Symms or Evans.

The only difference is that a vote for Steve Symms is a vote to retain the majority in the Senate that we must have to keep our Western committee chairmen in a position of power to enable them to deliver for us. The recent award of the SIS Project to INEL, with its 750 jobs and $150 million annual boost to our economy, is a case in point. The political clout of the Symms-McClure team prevailed. That's what political power is all about.

Court orders money returned

BOISE (AP) — A Clayton businessman and a mining company have been ordered by a 4th District judge to repay Idahoans who invested in their mining venture, the state Department of Finance said.

Fourth District Judge Robert G. Newhouse also has ordered Fletcher D. Fisher and Fisher International Inc., to refrain from violating the Idaho Securities Act and to gain the state's permission before using exemptions in the act to sell securities, according to a department press release.

Fisher, the company and a former company official, Robert L. Echols Jr., Boise, raised about $800,000 from 30 Idaho investors, by promising returns on mines, the Finance Department said.

The defendants' one developed mine and mill were shut down in 1984 after not recovering the costs of initial shipments.

Permanent injunctions against Fisher and Fisher International were entered after they did no answer a complaint by the Department of Finance. The case against Echols is pending.

Idaho airports in line for grants

WASHINGTON (AP) — The controversial Gem County airport project near Emmett is among three Idaho airports in line for nearly $700,000 in Federal Aviation Administration grants.

The FAA has allocated $247,850 from its Airport Improvement Program to buy land for the $1.5 million airport development that is the subject of a federal lawsuit by local residents who claim it would endanger birds and wildlife at the Kennedy-Keefer Wildlife Management Area, about a quarter-mile away.

Two of the three Gem County commissioners, Bill Conrad and Bill Norwood, narrowly survived recall elections in July sparked by the airport controversy.

IPC requests delay of hearings

BOISE (AP) — Idaho Power Co. has asked state utility regulators for an indefinite delay of hearings scheduled to begin Friday on how a rate increase approved last month should be allocated among the company's customers.

Idaho Power wants to delay the proceedings until after the Idaho Public Utilities Commission acts on its petition for reconsideration of the July order denying all but about $981,000 of the company's request for a $66.2 million rate hike.

A decision on that petition is expected later this week, PUC spokeswoman Rene Kimball said Tuesday.

But the commission staff already has conceded one point raised by Idaho Power.

Kimball said officials have admitted computational mistakes that resulted in a rate increase about $800,000 smaller than the order intended.

Task force to work on interest dispute

By MARILYN HAUK ESSEX
The Associated Press

BOISE — Gov. John Evans appointed three members of the Idaho Land Board Tuesday to work with State Treasurer Marjorie Ruth Moon in settling a dispute over interest earned on money in a special Department of Lands account.

But Miss Moon said it will take a court order to make her pay back interest that would have accrued on money that the Idaho Supreme Court ruled in the future should be credited to the Department of Lands account.

At the Land Board meeting Tuesday, Evans named State Auditor Joe Williams, Attorney General Jim Jones, and state Superintendent Jerry Evans to try to find a compromise with Miss Moon.

However, Miss Moon said the Supreme Court order did not address back interest, and she said she can't divert money from the general fund without a court order or legislative appropriation.

Superintendent Evans urged the Land Board to file court action to settle the matter.

"When the courts have spoken as clearly as they have, it seems to me we have no choice but to take legal action to correct this error by the state treasurer," Superintendent Evans said.

At issue in the Supreme Court order handed down in June was whether interest earned on a special fund to pay the Department of Land's cost in administerng endowed lands should be credited to the special fund or the general fund, said Miss Moon's attorney, John Chapman.

The Idaho Supreme Court ordered Miss Moon to start crediting the interest to the special fund in the future, but made no stipulation for back interest.

Chapman said the Idaho Legislature set up a special fund that—starting in 1971, diverted 10 percent of the money derived from timber sales, grazing fees or other fees earned on endowed lands into a special fund to pay the costs of administering the endowed lands.

Miss Moon said she felt obligated under state law to deposit interest earned on that special fund back to the general fund, rather than let it benefit the Department of Lands.

Custer County budget picture bleak

CHALLIS (AP) — Custer County officials are wrestling with a revenue shortfall in the 1986-87 fiscal year budget that may mean layoffs at the county courthouse.

County Clerk Ethel Peck estimated a $76,000 shortfall in anticipated revenue, even though the county plans to cut spending by $100,000 from the current budget. The proposed budget is $1.5 million compared with $1.6 million this year.

Coupled with a reduced estimated cash carryover of $20,000, down from $75,000 last year, the bottom line is "not a very good picture," Peck said.

"Cuts have been made across the board and it hurts," she said.

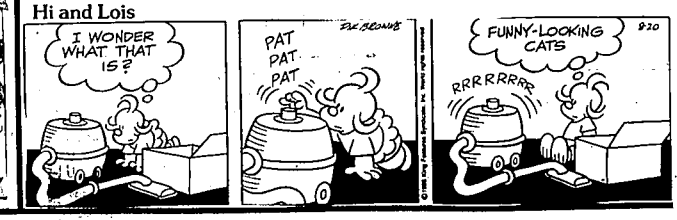
Hi and Lois



L.M. Boyd What's what

Your brain waves come in four lengths: 1. Delta, when you sleep. 2. Theta, when you get a bright idea. 3. Beta, when you puzzle over a problem. And 4. Alxha, when you let go of anxiety. Mostly what the psychiatrists want you to do, they say, is turn in some of your betas — "Dear me!" — for a few more alphas — "Who cares!"

Q. Tracers of British family trees say they can't go back farther than 1066. Why not?

A. After the Battle of Hastings then-William the Conqueror ordered every man to the kingdom to select an surname. For awhile there, a father named John Smith might have three sons named Edward Farmer, Matthew Cook and Arthur Hunter.

"Shortbread" isn't bread. It's a thick cookie.

COMMERCIALS

TV viewers are divided down the middle now: Those who like the Levi 501 blues commercials and those who prefer the Bartles & James commercials. A few oddballs say they like both, but they're in the minority and some of them lie.

Q. What was a typical week's wages at the start of World War II?

A. About $20. Specifically, the 1941 annual median: $1,070.

Smart bird, the crow. It puts ants under its feathers to eat tiny parasites therein.

Claim is George Gershwin learned to play some tunes by letting his fingers follow the moving keys of a player piano. Now that electronic keyboards are programmed, is it not likely piano lessons similarly will come out in software programs, even as computerized typing lessons do?

TOBACCO

Most natives in the Western Hemisphere used tobacco before Christopher Columbus showed up. On the northern continent, they smoked it. But not on the southern continent. There, they chewed it.

A Huegenot named Bernard Palisay expressed the opinion in 1589 that fossils were the remains of living critters. Those who didn't agree burned him at the stake.

Some claim the great advantage Honolulu has over other cities is it's so far from its nation's capital. The Soviet's Moscow is closer to Washington, D.C.

Hard luck town plays lottery to bail out its ailing treasury

WEST HOMESTEAD, Pa. (AP) — For the past 20 months, municipal employees have been pooling donations and playing the state lottery in hopes of hitting a jackpot to bail out this ailing mill town's depleted treasury.

"We believe in miracles. We're great believers. We've had our share of bad luck," said Elsie Fekety, the borough secretary who kicks in $2 a month.

Donations have come from 33 borough employees and are used to play the Pennsylvania Lotto, in which players try to pick the six numbers drawn from a 40-number pool. The game offers a minimum prize of $1.1 million, a windfall the distressed town would use for civic improvements.

The town plays 16 sets of six numbers three times a week. It costs $24 a week to play. At the beginning of August, the town had spent $624 on tickets and had won $1,340 in smaller prizes.

On Aug. 6, five of the town's six numbers were picked, which meant a payoff of $776 and a surge in enthusiasm. The booty is plowed back into the fund to buy more tickets.

"We're going to hit it. I didn't think it would take this long. We're patient. We're right around the corner. We're going to continue to play until the fund dries out," said Mayor John Dindak, who came up with the idea.

West Homestead, which sits along the Monongahela River south of Pittsburgh, is an ethnic, blue-collar hamlet of 3,200 residents that fell on bad times when its smokestack industry collapsed.

It was host to the bankrupt Mesta Machine Co., which once employed 1,000 workers. USX Corp.'s Homestead Works, where employment peaked at 15,000 during World War II, straddles the border with Homestead. The giant steel plant was shuttered earlier this year.

USX, formerly U.S. Steel, pays $24,000 annually in real estate taxes to West Homestead but wants a reduction of 50 percent because the plant is closed.

A tax cut for the steel company would further strain borough finances. In the past five years, the police force has been cut in half to five and all employees have endured a wage and benefit freeze.

Because taxes are at the legal limit, Dindak gambled on a more providential source of income to shore up the $780,000 town budget. He suggested the lottery idea in December 1984.

"It was budget time. I wondered how we were going to balance the budget. I went up to play my own lottery numbers, and I thought, wouldn't it be a godsend if the borough won," said Dindak, 58, who was a steel worker for 41 years and has been mayor for 16 years.

Dindak, who makes $83 a month as mayor, has plans if the gamble pays off.

"We'll certainly cut taxes. All our roads need paved, and we're going to pave them all. When we hit the Lotto, the employees will get their raise. I owe them," the mayor said. "And we're going to shut down the town for three days and party."

The odds of picking the right numbers are 1.9 million to one, and Dindak said the town will carry on win or lose.

Blinded by car lights, driver strikes 4 men

NEW YORK (AP) — Three men died and one was critically injured when they were hit by a car after they got out of a taxi on a highway to help another motorist, police said.

Police said the four men were hit by a car whose driver said he didn't see them because he was blinded by the lights of the disabled car the men had left their vehicle to inspect.

The driver, who was not identified, was not charged, authorities said.

Three people, including Salvatore Vasquez, 32, died at the scene Monday night and a fourth was taken to North Central Bronx Hospital where he was in critical condition on Tuesday, said Officer Vincent Jones.

The names of the other victims were not immediately available.

One person was knocked from the southbound lane into the northbound lane where he was hit a second time by another car, police said.

Authorities said the four men were traveling south in a taxi on the Bronx River Parkway when they saw a driver lose control of his car ahead of them. Police said the disabled car had been racing with another car.

"When the driver lost control, the car mounted the guard rail and came to rest facing oncoming traffic," Jones said.

The four men left their car and went to the disabled car, only to find that it had been deserted by its occupants, two men, Jones said. They were hit as they walked back to their taxi.

Police spokesman Sgt. Ed Burns said the driver told police he had been blinded by the lights of the disabled vehicle.

Police initially had reported that the accident was a hit-and-run.

Luxury dorms lure upperclassmen

ATLANTA (AP) — Emory University, faced with an unexpected invasion of freshmen in the biggest class in its history, bribed upperclassmen with $1,000 or a luxury apartment to move out of their dorms.

Emory accepted some 2,700 applicants for this year's freshman class, figuring from experience that about 950 would actually enroll. Most college-bound high school seniors are accepted by several schools.

But 1,250 turned up.

"This is the largest class in our history," admissions director Dan Walls said Monday. "The university has had to do some real creative planning for this onslaught of freshmen."

The problem was solved when at least a dozen students took the $1,000 and moved out, and the university was flooded with requests from others who wanted to spend their year studying by the pool in the apartment complex.

"The feedback was very good about the apartment complex," said housing director Joe Moon.

Emory has rented an entire section of the new Summit Point complex about a mile from campus. Some 250 students will live there, two to a bedroom — some in $500-a-month one-bedroom flats, others forced to slave away the 1986-87 academic year in an $800-a-month two-bedroom townhouse.

NEW YORK (AP) — Three men died and one was critically injured when they were hit by a car after they got out of a taxi on a highway to help another motorist, police said.

Police said the four men were hit by a car whose driver said he didn't see them because he was blinded by the lights of the disabled car the men had left their vehicle to inspect.

The driver, who was not identified, was not charged, authorities said.

Three people, including Salvatore Vasquez, 32, died at the scene Monday night and a fourth was taken to North Central Bronx Hospital where he was in critical condition on Tuesday, said Officer Vincent Jones.

The names of the other victims were not immediately available.

One person was knocked from the southbound lane into the northbound lane where he was hit a second time by another car, police said.

Authorities said the four men were traveling south in a taxi on the Bronx River Parkway when they saw a driver lose control of his car ahead of them. Police said the disabled car had been racing with another car.

"When the driver lost control, the car mounted the guard rail and came to rest facing oncoming traffic," Jones said.

The four men left their car and went to the disabled car, only to find that it had been deserted by its occupants, two men, Jones said. They were hit as they walked back to their taxi.

Police spokesman Sgt. Ed Burns said the driver told police he had been blinded by the lights of the disabled vehicle.

Police initially had reported that the accident was a hit-and-run.

Luxury dorms lure upperclassmen

ATLANTA (AP) — Emory University, faced with an unexpected invasion of freshmen in the biggest class in its history, bribed upperclassmen with $1,000 or a luxury apartment to move out of their dorms.

Emory accepted some 2,700 applicants for this year's freshman class, figuring from experience that about 90% would actually enroll. Most college-bound high school seniors are accepted by several schools.

But 1,250 turned up.

"This is the largest class in our history," admissions director Dan Walls said Monday. "The university has had to do some real creative planning for this onslaught of freshmen."

The problem was solved when at least a dozen students took the $1,000 and moved out, and the university was flooded with requests from others who wanted to spend their year studying by the pool in the apartment complex.

"The feedback was very good about the apartment complex," said housing director Joe Moon.

Emory has rented an entire section of the new Summit Point complex about a mile from campus. Some 250 students will live there, two to a bedroom — some in $500-a-month one-bedroom flats, others forced to slave away the 1986-87 academic year in an $800-a-month two-bedroom townhouse.

New bins boost area bean capacity

Station designed to be faster and more efficient

By BOB FREUND
Times-News writer

KIMBERLY — A long-standing power in the dry bean business at the west end of the Magic Valley, Rangen Inc. of Buhl, will reach into the market at the east end of the valley this harvest with a new receiving station at Kimberly.

Next week, the agricultural company will start filling six steel bins on the site with the new crop of dry beans coming out of area fields, Plant Manager Terry Cummins said Tuesday.

Those towering bins and a large warehouse along U.S. 30, east of Kimberly, will hold more than 140,000 (100-pound) sacks of beans. The facility will boost Rangen's system-wide bean capacity to about 450,000 hundredweight, Commodities Manager Keith Shark said.

Built at a cost of $550,000, the complex is one sign of Rangen's ambitions for growth. "We're trying to increase our volume on all commodities," Shark said Tuesday, as 30 workers hurried to complete construction.

In the past few years Rangen and other independents in the Magic Valley have encountered new competition for farmers' beans. International marketers — such as Klein Brothers Ltd. of California and Berger and Company of San Francisco — have moved into the valley by acquiring warehouses.

Rangen's response, Shark said, is to meet the competition. "By handling more product, we should become more efficient, which should make us more competitive in the market," he said.

Its Kimberly receiving station is designed for speed and efficiency. Its pre-cleaning equipment and conveyors can carry 1,800 sacks of beans an hour to bin storage. Loading and unloading operations are electronically controlled from a master panel. Cummins, a warehouse worker, and a secretary will operate the station.

The station also will act as a distribution point for Rangen bean seed and grain seed, Shark said. The bean seed — and the type of credit available in paying for it — can be an important tool in gaining future business from farmers.

Traditionally, Rangen has drawn very few of its beans from farms east of Twin Falls. That has been changing quickly. Last season, when it leased storage space from Uhlig Ranches near Murtaugh, about 25 percent of the company's bean volume came from that area, Shark said.

Locating a large receiving station in the area will save transportation costs and will give the company a permanent presence in a high-quality bean belt. Rangen expects to take in most of its crop from farms near Murtaugh, Hansen, Eden and Hazelton, Cummins said.

Workers have nearly completed a receiving station for Rangen Inc. east of Kimberly

Rangen's reach to the east also may have been triggered by acreage cutbacks by farmers in its backyard, the western part of the Magic Valley. Farmers who depend on costly, high-lift irrigation have been trimming plantings in areas west of Castleford, an industry source suggests.

As the bean combines fire up their engines for the harvest, both the Idaho and the national bean crops appear larger than last year's. The Magic Valley situation remains uncertain, although some bean dealers say actual yields may be off the forecasts.

Although years vary, dry edible beans — such as Great Northerns and pinto beans — account for about 60 percent of Rangen's business in commodities and about 15 percent of its overall volume, he said. The company also handles livestock feed, fish feed and fertilizers and operates three other locations — its Buhl headquarters, Culver and Heyburn. The agribusiness does not release revenue figures.

With its new receiving station almost ready to open, Rangen is expressing optimism in the area and in markets for dry edible beans, Shark said. "This is a long-range investment," he said. "We have been in business a long time and we intend to stay in business."

Local officials say mandates too expensive

By The Times-News and
The Associated Press

TWIN FALLS — Officials from Twin Falls County and other counties in the state told a legislative council on Monday that state mandates were costing them money.

In November, county officials will meet again with the council, this time to provide specific proposals to ease the financial burden, says Twin Falls County Commissioner Judy Felton.

Felton and the other commissioners; Ann Cover and Marvin Hempleman, and County Clerk Dick Pence attended the meeting in Boise of the Legislative Council County-City Mandates Committee, established by the Legislature during its 1986 session. None of the legislators on the committee were from the Magic Valley.

Felton said she and the other commissioners — who were out of the office Tuesday — were generally pleased with the meeting.

Representatives from several counties and the Idaho Association of Counties presented a list of 13 state mandates proving to be a burden to the counties, Felton said.

Among the mandates was the 1 Percent Initiative, which restricts the annual growth of budgets. County officials contend that the restrictions are injurious because their duties are growing, but not the funds with which to conduct them.

Pence told the committee that Twin Falls County has faced in the last eight years revenue increases of $306,000 while legislative mandates added $613,000 to the county budget over the same period.

Another topic was the circuit breaker, a property-tax exemption for low-income and disabled county residents. The state is supposed to pay the county the amount of taxes the exemption reduced. But annually the state has a shortfall, leaving the counties to levy taxes to pay for the program. Twin Falls County will have to levy about $15,000 in the upcoming fiscal year to pay for the circuit breaker, Pence previously reported.

Counties were performing state jobs, but not getting paid, Felton added. One example was the extradition of state prisoners from different states. Expenses in those cases now are paid by the counties.

Counties also provide vehicle titles and issue drivers licenses, a state function. But they don't receive enough revenue from the state to operate the programs, she added.

"People pay for licenses and they assume we (the county) are keeping the money," Felton said. The revenue from the licenses and titles are going to other departments, such as the State Police.

Because of a cap on the population at the Idaho State Penitentiary, counties are having to warehouse inmates in county jails until room becomes available at the state facility and the counties are footing the bill, Felton said.

"We should be able to bill the state for those services," she added.

The county also is paying for indigents to appeal criminal convictions through its public defender programs. The association estimated that appeals account for about 25 percent of a public defender's duties, Felton reported. That function, she added, should belong to the state.

Other concerns included state requirements that counties provide medical care for indigents, which is escalating, and landfills.

The rising costs of indigent care is not isolated to Twin Falls County, which will raise its poor fund to $1 million in 1986-87, compared to $699,000 this year. Felton said other counties are in the same boat, such as Canyon County, which had a $500,000 indigent fund this year, but will hike the 1986-87 budget to $1 million.

Counties will have to start purchasing property for landfills because the U.S. Bureau of Land Management will no longer lease federal land for that purpose.

"How are we going to accumulate the funds to buy that property?" Felton asked.

The meeting covering those topics and more was general in nature, she added. But specific proposals will be prepared and presented to the legislative council in November. The proposals will be reviewed in October by county representatives at the annual association meeting in Coeur d'Alene. Some proposals may include "weeding out" those unnecessary state services and recodifying the indigent law to help ease the burden, she said.

Counties' complaints about state mandates but no funding have been around for several years, but this year is different because counties are hurting financially, Felton said. The association estimated that at least half of the state's 44 counties have had to borrow money to maintain operations, she added. A few years ago, borrowing was rare.

"We're not looking for a bucket full of money," Felton said. "We are looking for a way to provide needed services and fund those services. We aren't saying we don't want to perform our duties. Counties are here to perform work of the state and it's necessary we work together."

Sen. C.A. "Skip" Smyser, committee chairman, said testimony throughout the day reiterated the message of counties facing serious cutbacks because of funding problems.

Smyser said indigency appropriations have increased dramatically in counties around the state because of the loss of federal revenue sharing funds, Gramm-Rudman legislation and other factors.

INEL studies remains of reactor core

Scientists hope to improve nuclear safety by examining Three Mile Island materials

By MARK PRATTER
Times-News writer

ARCO — Scientists at the Idaho National Engineering Laboratory are hoping to improve nuclear power plant safety by examining the charred and twisted remains of the Three Mile Island nuclear reactor core.

"We hope to get insight into designing better fuel rods and find out how components failed" in the 1979 accident in Pennsylvania, said Jay N. Davis, who manages the evaluation of radioactive materials.

Davis, a Filer native, said that since the first of 40 shipments from Three Mile Island arrived two weeks ago technicians have been busy unloading radioactive materials from huge shipping casks, which weigh about 100 tons.

Each cask contains seven canisters of material from the core, he said Tuesday.

The casks are shipped to a railhead about 30 miles south of the sprawling INEL site. They are then loaded onto a truck, which travels about 5 m.p.h. to the Test Area North at INEL's 570,000-acre site near here.

Once on site, the casks are cleaned of road dirt. Some of the canisters in the casks are placed into rectangular metal modules for temporary storage in a water bath on the site.

Other canisters are moved to "hot shop" laboratories, where technicians, shielded from radiation behind four-foot-thick panes of glass, use mechanical arms to remove core material for testing. There is an eerie quiet in the rooms where technicians manipulate the TMI material. Behind the safety barriers, the mechanical equipment moves with cold, mechanical precision. Safety bolts are removed and material is withdrawn — all by remote control.

Davis said some of the material will be examined at INEL labs and some will be sent to labs abroad.

Though the TMI accident was seven years ago, the material from the core is still radioactively hot. The material emits 100 rads per hour (a measure of radiation). Davis said if workers weren't protected from this, they could receive their annual allowed dosage in seconds.

County hires new deputy prosecutor

Horton, 26, has been with the prosecutor's office since July 14. He came to Twin Falls after practicing law in Lewiston for a year.

He is originally from Seattle and attended the University of Washington there for undergraduate work. He received his degree from the University of Idaho School of Law.

Horton said Tuesday that Twin Falls will probably be home for quite a while.

"I love Twin Falls. The area has great recreational opportunities, like the skiing up north, hunting, and fishing. The people here are very friendly," he said.

Though Horton said he has no long-term goals as far as his practice is concerned, he and his wife will probably be settling in Twin Falls. He is currently obliged to stay with the Prosecutor's Office for two years.

"They're a good group of people," Horton said of his co-workers. "I like working with the people here and I look forward to working with them in the future."

Since his arrival in July, Horton has been handling all juvenile prosecutions, and has been sharing the misdemeanor and felony cases with the other prosecutors.

JOEL HORTON
Practiced law in Lewiston

In Lewiston, Horton was with a law firm that emphasized personal litigation and defense. He said the responsibilities of his current job put him on the "opposite side of the fence" of his former practice.

Something Horton has noticed about practicing law in Twin Falls is the caliber of practicing attorneys. "Twin Falls has an outstanding bar," he said.

Beth Smith, the former deputy county prosecutor, went into private practice with her husband Paul, at his law firm, Horton said.

Offer to buy Albion building withdrawn

By BONNIE BAIRD JONES
Times-News writer

ALBION — Another hope for salvaging a portion of the old college campus at Albion has been shattered, just a step away from reality.

Teddy Keaton of San Diego, and formerly of Boise — where she was known as Fairy Frank, told The Times-News Monday night that she has withdrawn an offer to purchase the old McMurry Hall and 2.5 acres of land for use as an arts center.

Keaton's offer to the Albion City Council to purchase the building and land on what was once the Southern Idaho College of Education was met with a counter offer, which she said she could not accept.

"They (City Council members) wanted to let me buy the building but restrict me to only 30 feet of land on each side of it. This would not be enough for landscaping and parking and it wouldn't even include the sidewalk in front of the building," Keaton said.

She said she drove to Albion last week and with the help of the city attorney, Steve Bywater, set up a special meeting with the City Council; but nobody came.

Mayor Jim Kelley said the meeting call was on such short notice that it was not possible to get in touch with all council members and several others were unable to attend. The Keatons indicated they could not stay over until such a meeting could be arranged, he said.

In meeting to discuss the Keatons' offer, members of the council felt the $12,000 bid for the building and land was not enough, Kelley said, explaining that the land around McMurry Hall is highway frontage and the most valuable on the campus for any type of development.

Keaton told The Times-News she had looked at other Albion property but has since selected two acres of land on the Snake River Canyon rim, north of Filer.

She said she has purchased the Twin Falls County site and will go ahead with plans for an art center. Her plans call for locating an older building, hopefully one with historical significance, that she can purchase and move to the canyon site for remodeling.

She said she has purchased the Twin Falls County site and will go ahead with plans for an art center. Her plans call for locating an older building, hopefully one with historical significance, that she can purchase and move to the canyon site for remodeling.

Ann Phillips of Rupert, who heads a Save-The-Campus move, said she is very disappointed in the failure. She has been working the past several years to interest individuals and businesses in purchasing the decaying buildings or land on the 40-acre campus, to save it from demolition.

Kelley said the council supports such a plan and he is disappointed that the recent effort has fallen thorugh. But, he added, the city has to be protected in any transaction.

He said the city asked for the cash "up front" in the McMurry Hall proposal, and also requested that the buyer agree to have some progress made within a specified time frame. He said Mrs. Keaton wanted to pay for the property over a period of several years, while working on the building renovation.

Although the city of Albion obtained ownership of the campus after the facility closed as a school in 1951, the title to the land is contested by George Kelley of Albion, who purchased deeds from the heirs of the original donors. He contends that when the college was started in the late 1800s, several citizens donated land with the stipulation it be used for educational purposes or revert to the donors. Since it was abandoned for school purposes, Kelley purchased property deeds from the heirs and is now legally con-

Parents offered tips for fair

TWIN FALLS — Parents who will be taking children to the Twin Falls County Fair and Rodeo Sept. 2-6 are being asked to do some advanced planning so their children don't end up in "lost and found."

Sheriff James Munn says that reuniting missing children with their parents or those who took them to the fair or rodeo consumes a large share of his department's time each fair week.

"This year we are trying to give parents some advance suggestions on how to keep from losing the children in the crowds and hopefully reduce the problem for us, as well as for the parents and children," Munn says.

Large signs will be posted throughout the fairgrounds this year, telling parents what to do in the event of a missing child.

But, Munn says, there are some precautions the parents should be thinking about before going to the fair.

In the event of a lost child, the parent or guardian should report immediately to the sheriff's office, located at the north end of the rodeo stands.

Munn also suggests that parents prepare a tag for each child to wear that will give the name, age and parents' name, address and telephone number. Officers can then announce the whereabouts of the missing child or contact someone at home.

City limits student parking

TWIN FALLS — Twin Falls High School students will have to find some place other than Sophomore Boulevard to park while they are in class this fall.

The city has agreed to close the street to parking from 8 a.m. to 4 p.m. weekdays, at the request of nine of the 10 households on the lane across from the high school.

The street is "more or less used for a parking lot by students at the high school," says City Manager Tom Courtney. While that in itself is not a problem, the large number of cars parked there during the school day would block emergency vehicles if they were needed, he says.

Residents have asked that signs announcing the new restrictions be posted before the school year begins.

Dental office hit by burglars

TWIN FALLS — A burglary at the dental office of Dr. Steve Lincoln, at 174 Ash St. N., was reported Tuesday to Twin Falls police.

Officers said an estimated $1,050 in dental supplies was listed as missing. Someone broke through a window and once inside ransacked the entire building. Of the total loss, $50 was in cash and small change.

Pot patch found in Cassia County

By BONNIE BAIRD JONES
Times-News writer

BURLEY — The third major marijuana field to be found in Cassia County in recent weeks was being investigated Tuesday by the Cassia County Sheriff's Department.

The cultivated patch, containing 126 plants, three to four feet tall and representing a value of about $126,000, came to light last weekend after a call from a concerned citizen.

Sheriff Billy Crystal said the caller, who wished to remain anonymous, spotted the crop in the Almo Park area. The drug task force, including county, state, Burley city police officers and U.S. Forest service personnel, harvested the plants.

In an apparently unrelated incident involving another marijuana field in the Burley area, Crystal said a Boise man who was injured nearly two weeks ago in a shooting has disappeared from Cassia Memorial Hospital.

Warren Dudley, 34, was taken to the Cassia Memorial Hospital Aug. 8 after being wounded in the buttocks by a shotgun blast. Officers said the shooting took place at the site of a marijuana field in Big Cedar Canyon.

Dudley had asked Thursday to be transferred to a Boise hospital, Crystal said, but before the transfer was cleared he disappeared from the Burley hospital. Crystal said the man, who had been listed in critical condition, was still in need of medical treatment.

There were no charges against Dudley, although officers said he was a suspect in connection with the second marijuana discovery. Because he was not being held, officers said he may have decided to go to Boise on his own for medical treatment.

All three marijuana discoveries remain under investigation, Crystal said. He added that it appears from investigation that some of the marijuana "plantations" in Cassia County were used to supply the Boise area.

In the Big Cedar Canyon area just over two weeks ago, officers were led to the scene of about 400 plants by the barking of a dog. The dog had been stolen and left tied in the area to guard the project.

After Dudley was injured, another 400 plants were located in the same general area. The newer discovery of 125 plants was made during the past weekend.

Crystal said there may be still more marijuana gardens or fields in the area and urged the public to report any suspicious plantings.

Mayor Kelley says this pending litigation is tying up the property and making it almost impossible for the city to encourage buyers or developers. However, Keaton said, George Kelley had agreed to the McMurry Hall sale with the provision that if the court ruled in his favor he would receive the money from the sale.

Keaton had asked for a committee of college alumni to work with her in preparing a master plan for campus development and said she would assist in efforts to create a museum or other establishment in some of the old campus buildings.

Phillips, a former student, has made a nationwide search for prospective buyers and developers for the campus for the past several years. On other occasions she has created developer interest, only to have it dissolve, she said. She had hoped the Albion City Council would have been willing to make a few concessions to Keaton in order to get development started.

"It is especially disappointing that the city could not get together with (Keaton). I feel if we could renovate one building and put it to use, it would encourage others to locate on the campus," she said. "Right now we have someone looking at the old auditorium with a plan to fix it up for theater productions, but we are afraid it may not materialize since the art center plan has died."

Phillips said that unless the city or someone does something immediate to repair roofs on the deteriorating buildings, they may all be lost for any purposeful use in the future.

The material is not nearly as hot as some other nuclear material the Test Area North has handled, Davis said. But the shipments which are to arrive over the next two years have created a certain excitement among the workers and given the activities of the facility a new visibility.

The work is being done by EG&G under contract with the U.S. Department of Energy, which administers INEL.

One piece from the TMI reactor visible on Tuesday appeared bent and burned. Photographs of other core items, such as fuel rods, showed twisted metal destruction.

Material from the core will be cut up and polished and examined under high magnification, Davis said.

The accident was the result of a loss of cooling water in the hot reactor core. The core was damaged, radioactive water leaked into the reactor building and a small amount of radioactive gases escaped into the environment, Davis said. Scientists want to learn how different materials behave under those conditions, he said.

In July 1985 scientists at INEL purposely caused small-scale damage at the Loft reactor on site to determine what effect loss of cooling water would have on the reactor core. Now, with the TMI material in hand, scientists have a working laboratory of an actual accident.

Part of the nuclear safety testing at Test Area North involves stress testing of materials used in the nuclear industry.

One of the cannisters from the TMI shipment is being subjected to corrosives to determine the safety limits of the cannister, Davis said.

About one fourth of Davis' $8 million budget next year will be devoted to TMI research. He estimated it will cost $200,000 per year to store the material on site until a permanent disposal site is developed.

One possibility for permanent storage would be in Hanford, Wash., Davis said.

Soviets' report says errors led to disaster

By ROBERT GILLETTE
Los Angeles Times

VIENNA, Austria — An official summary of the Soviet government's report on the Chernobyl accident says that it was caused by reactor operators who ignored both established rules of procedure and clear signs of developing trouble as they rushed to complete a planned test on one of the reactor's turbines.

The summary outlines an accelerating sequence of operator errors and signs of erratic behavior in the 1,000-megawatt reactor itself that began a full 12 hours before a catastrophic explosion blew the top off the reactor early in the morning of April 26 and ignited a graphite fire that spread radioactive contamination around the world.

"Personnel deviated from the planned test program, creating the very conditions in which an accident situation would arise," the 67-page summary says.

"The basic motivation for the behavior of operating personnel was an effort to finish the experiment faster," the report concludes.

Their behavior, it adds, suggests a "loss of the sense of danger" that is inherent in nuclear energy.

The Russian-language summary condenses a 382-page analysis of the accident prepared by a Soviet government commission and submitted late last week to the International Atomic Energy Agency. The IAEA has distributed the summary and the full report to its 110 member governments for discussion at a five-day meeting in Vienna beginning Monday. The Soviets have asked that the report not be published.

A copy of the summary was made available to the Los Angles Times by a member government.

Technical experts who have seen the full report said their initial impression is that it is thorough and frank, in contrast with the secrecy with which the Soviets at first treated the accident. The report places heavy emphasis, however, on human error as opposed to any inherent weaknesses that may have existed in the reactor design.

At least 31 people have died so far from injuries and radiation poisoning, about 300 were hospitalized and 92,000 people were evacuated from contaminated areas, which covered more than 1,000 square kilometers (400 square miles) of prime farmland. The Soviet government has estimated that direct damages amounted to the equivalent of $2.8 billion.

Nevertheless, the summary observes that "It would be impossible to imagine a future world economy without nuclear energy." The summary report, which was translated by The Times, notes that Soviet analysts were hindered in their efforts to analyze the accident because operators had turned off a computer that automatically and continuously recorded data on conditions within the reactor. The operators had been using the computer instead mainly to record data from the test they were to carry out.

As a result, Soviet experts had to rely on a mathematical model, as well as on instrument readings and eyewitness testimony, to reconstruct the accident.

According to the summary report, the sequence of events leading to the accident began at 1 a.m. April 25, more than 24 hours earlier, as operators began powering down the No. 4 unit at Chernobyl for normal maintenance and refueling.

The planned test, on the No. 8 turbine generator, was designed to determine whether kinetic or mechanical energy of the turbine — in effect, its momentum — could be used to drive emergency systems if the plant were disconnected from the electric power grid. In the process, one emergency core cooling system linked to the turbine generator was also disconnected.

"Under prevailing rules, such a test on an operating reactor was not forbidden," the report says. It notes that "similar tests had already been carried out earlier at this plant."

However, this time, it said, the quality of written test procedures was low, attention to safety measures was treated as little more than a formality, and supervisors failed to ensure that specialists were on hand "in the event of an accident situation."

In retrospect, the first major operator error was said to have occurred 12 hours later, at 1 p.m. April 25, when a second turbine, the No. 7, was also shut down in violation of the test plan. An hour later, its associated emergency cooling system was also disconnected.

Operators later explained, the report says, that they had planned to switch the test to this turbine if the first attempt on the No. 8 turbine was not successful.

However the report continues, the reactor's safety design "did not envision" the possibility that two sets of emergency systems would be deliberately disconnected at the same time.

During the rest of April 25, operators gradually reduced reactor power until 11:10 p.m., when they observed unexplained fluctuations — a sharp drop — in power. About two hours later, at 1 a.m. Saturday, April 26, operators had stabilized the reactor at 200 megawatts of thermal power, only to find that a buildup of xenon, a gaseous contaminant, was causing an uneven and potentially dangerous distribution of power in the reactor core.

Over the next 20 minutes, each effort to solve this problem led to yet another. The flow of feedwater into the cooling system fluctuated, and the power profile in the core grew more uneven.

As they grappled with these snowballing problems, the unidentified operators are said to have committed yet another major error by cutting off "emergency protection signals," which apparently indicated such vital data as internal reactor temperature and water flow.

"Despite all this," the report observes, "it was decided to conduct the experiment."

"Under established procedures," the report continues, the reactor's erratic behavior as of 1:22:30 a.m. April 26 "required immediate shutdown. Nevertheless, the operator did not stop (the reactor) and the experiment was begun."

In a few moments, reactor power began to rise, then in the span of three seconds, it shot up 530 megawatts.

At 1 minute, 10 seconds into the experiment, the shift chief "gave the command to press the AZ-5 (emergency shutdown) button," a signal from which would insert all control rods into the core. But the reactor was now beyond control.

Seconds later, a shudder shook the reactor building and the control rods jammed part way down.

In a last-resort effort to stop the nuclear chain reaction, operators then disconnected the servo-motors driving the control rods, hoping the rods fall by their own weight into the core.

That maneuver also failed. Fuel rods now were overheating and bursting, and a shattering steam explosion ripped off the top of the reactor and breached enclosing buildings. A heavy refueling crane toppled into the open reactor, rupturing still more fuel.

As burning debris and sparks flew across the roof of the adjacent turbine hall, they ignited 30 fires simultaneously. Inside the reactor core, graphite continued to burn, sending a plume of radioactive fission wastes into the atmosphere and ultimately around the world, until military helicopters quenched the fire with 5,000 tons of smothering sand, lead and boron.

Gorbachev leaves Moscow for traditional summer holiday

Gorbachev's departure followed his televised speech Monday night in which he extended the Kremlin's moratorium on nuclear tests until the end of the year.

Tass did not say where the 55-year-old leader would spend his holiday, or how long he would be away from the Soviet capital.

Camera theft probed

The U.S. Customs Service is investigating the alleged theft attempt.

The alleged scheme was discovered May 27 when security officers at ReconOptical Inc. in suburban Barrington stopped three Israeli air force officers as they were leaving the plant and confiscated 50,000 pages of technical drawings and notes handwritten in Hebrew.

Recon has filed a lawsuit in New York accusing the Israelis of trying to steal the technology used in a secret aerial reconnaissance system that was being developed for Israel by Recon, the Tribune said.

The reconnaissance system would have been more powerful than the current system, which can provide a detailed picture of someone smoking a cigarette in a public square from a jet flying at near the speed of sound more than 100 miles away, the Tribune reported.

Hagler eyes $10 million bout

By HAL BOCK
The Associated Press

NEW YORK — Marvelous Marvin Hagler has been guaranteed $10 million to defend his middleweight title against Sugar Ray Leonard, promoter Bob Arum said Tuesday.

And Leonard, the former welterweight champ who has not fought since May 11, 1984, will have to take "considerably less than that," according to Arum, who reached agreement for the fight with Hagler in New Hampshire Monday. "After all, Marvin is the champ."

Less money, however, may not be exactly what Leonard and his attorney, Mike Trainer, have in mind. In fact, they may not even have Arum in mind.

Leonard said he had instructed Trainer to begin discussions with Hagler's co-manager, Pat Petronelli, over details of the bout and "the people who will be involved in bringing the fight to the public."

Trainer said he had to sit down with Petronelli to negotiate a number of matters, including the promoter.

"Contrary to earlier reports, no date, site or promotional group has been been decided upon," Leonard said. "Those details will be discussed and mutually agreed upon when Trainer and Petronelli meet. I have high hopes that all the details will be resolved and that a speedy agreement will take placve. The sooner the better for all of us."

Arum's name was conspicuous by its absence in Leonard's statement. "I have no comment on that," the promoter said.

"It's all negotiating. I have a deal with Hagler and the Petronellis. They can talk with Leonard's people."

After meeting with Hagler Monday, Arum said the fight would be the richest in boxing history, topping the best previous payday for both boxers. Leonard reportedly made $13 million against Thomas Hearns and $10 million for his first meeting with Roberto Duran. Hagler earned about $10 million against Hearns.

If a Leonard-Hagler fight does materialize, it will be the culmination of plans that began five years ago, after Leonard regained the 147-pound title, earning $7 million, from Duran. He added the 154-pound title when he beat Ayub Kalule and seemed headed for a 160-pound showdown with Hagler when he suffered a detached retina. He retired following eye surgery, leaving Hagler still lungering for the big payday.

After a 27-month layoff, Leonard came back in 1984 to beat unheralded Kevin Howard. But he was disappointed with his performance, in which he was knocked down, and quit again that night.

Last May, as he turned 30, Leonard began talking about another fight, but only against Hagler. This time, it was Hagler who seemed reticent. At age 32 and after 13 years in the ring, he has been considering his own retirement. He also was not enthusiastic about giving a title shot to Leonard, who has fought only once in 4½ years.

When Hagler decided to go ahead with the fight, Leonard was enthusiastic. "I'm very excited that Marvin has decided to meet me in the ring," he said. "He is a great champion and I'm looking forward to fighting him."

Bias' lifestyle led to cocaine

Investigation shows change in final months

By SALLY JENKINS
and MICHAEL WILBON
The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — In the investigation of Maryland basketball star Len Bias' death, people in dark glasses go in and out of a small-town courthouse, friends become suspects, mystery women appear and disappear, a local nightclub becomes prominent. None of which provides the answer to what made a good guy come to such a bad end.

Perhaps not even Bias knew what caused him to ingest a lethal dose of cocaine in his dormitory room on the Maryland campus June 19. Was it the result of the persuasion of someone else? Or did he do it himself, uttering, according to sources, a now chilling phrase the moment before he collapsed and lost consciousness: "I'm a bad (deleted) and I can handle anything"?

Bias, at 22, may have just begun to solve his personal mysteries, and several different pictures of him have emerged in the weeks since his death. According to Bias' oldest and closest friends, as well as family, he remained a relatively clean-living, born-again Christian. Such sources speculate that Bias may have experimented with cocaine in a moment of euphoria resulting from his selection by the Boston Celtics in the first round of the NBA draft two days earlier. The darkest scenario has him being set up by a drug dealer looking to develop a customer.

LEN BIAS
Rounds of partying

Others, however, say Bias changed in the last months of his life, the once-gracious star athlete becoming arrogant, careless and even unpleasant on occasion. He spent large amounts of money on clothing and jewelry, spent as many as four nights a week at a Southeast Washington nightclub, and was warned that he was hanging out with the "wrong element." The consensus among friends is that if Bias did become involved with drugs on a regular basis, it would have happen-

JACKPOT — Jackpot High School boys' basketball Coach Chris Klekas has been named as the new head football coach at the school.

Klekas has been the basketball coach for the last three years and was an assistant under Fred Ball, a former Buhl High assistant coach who resigned to take a coaching and teaching job in Ely, Nev. Klekas also coaches the track and volleyball teams.

Before coming to Jackpot, Klekas coached basketball in Bakersfield, Calif. This is his first head football coaching job.

Jackpot played its first season of football last fall, playing eight-man style and finishing with a record of 0-7.

By RALPH BERNSTEIN
The Associated Press

STATE COLLEGE, Pa. — It's not that he's anti-bowl, Joe Paterno says, it's just that he's pro playoffs.

And as he prepares his Penn State football team for the 1988 season, Paterno again is thinking about a subject near and dear to his heart: a playoff system for the national championship.

His appetite for a head-on playoff — similar to college basketball's Final Four — and not a Top 20 writers' poll, has only increased in recent years.

Three times Penn State has been ranked No. 1 in the poll and has met the leading challenger in a bowl game for the national crown. It has won only once.

After the 1978 season, the Nittany Lions lost to Alabama in the Sugar Bowl, but returned to New Orleans after the '82 season and beat Georgia. After last season, they went to the Orange Bowl and lost to Oklahoma, finishing the year with a No. 3 ranking.

JOE PATERNO
Seeking the real No. 1

Paterno said he would like to see bowls used as part of a playoff system.

"Without any serious investigation a lot of people think I'm anti-bowl," he said. "I'm not. I very, very emphatically feel that we've got to somehow include bowls.

"Not only because I think we have an obligation to the bowls, but I think that ultimately it would be the best plan we could have."

Paterno said bowl organizers have the experience of putting on a "unique happening."

"But I think the bowl people should really have some faith in us that we want to continue with them," he said. "They should be happy we're looking into some possibilities that would include the bowls in a playoff that may be better for everybody — college football and bowls."

Paterno claims that every time colleges come close to even talking about playoffs "we've been stonewalled by the bowls."

Bowl officials, of coures, do not share Paterno's sentiments.

"The bowls all share a common position in that they do not favor a playoff," said Dan McNamara, executive director of the Orange Bowl. "What designating one game as a national championship would do is relegate all the others to semifinal and quarterfinal events. It would be suicide for the bowls.

"Who's going to decide what the format should be? What's the criteria for picking teams and how many? All of the plans I've seen leave a great deal to be desired."

Paterno, however, is hopeful a committee, appointed by the American Football Coaches Association to examine playoffs, will lead to a restructured system.

He even suggests that a playoff might help reverse decreasing college football television ratings.

"It would be like basketball where they're always talking about 'Who do you think will be in the Final Four?' or, this game has a bearing on whether (Penn State) is selected to the playoffs.

"Everything is in reference to the playoffs. You're constantly able to sell a particular game not only as a conference championship but as a step to the playoffs. Many gimmicks and story lines are developed. And you've always got that playoff at the end," he said.

Neill signs five more to CSI track

By The Times-News

TWIN FALLS — College of Southern Idaho track Coach Rick Neill has signed five more athletes to letters of intent to attend CSI.

The latest signings bring the total in the Eagles' program to 40, about double last year's compliment.

The latest additions include Horace Dove-Edwin, a resident of Freetown, Sierra Leone, who Neill saw run in the Commonwealth Games last month. Dove-Edwin, who will be a freshman, has run a 10.7-second 100-meter dash and a 21.4-second 200-meter dash. Dove-Edwin is a member of the national track team in his West African homeland.

Also committing to CSI was Robert McGovern, a middle-distance runner from Ireland. McGovern, who will also be a freshman, has run a 3:50 1,500 meters and a 1:54 800 and finished second in the Irish national championship in the 500.

The other newcomers are Becky Hinton from Emmett, who finished second in last spring's state Class A-2 track meet in the 100 with a time of 12.6 and second in the 200 with a time of 26.9. She also has a 16-foot, 4-inch long jump.

Also joining the Eagles will be Geoff Gallagher, a distance runner from Challis. Gallagher, who graduated from Challis High School a year ago, will run cross country as well as the 5,000 on the track team.

The fifth signee is Lance Canning, a weight specialist from Missoula, Mont. Canning, who will also be a freshman, has a personal best javelin throw of 211-0, as well as a 54-0 shot put and a 146-0 discus throw.

Ditka, McMahon conclude truce, blame media for their tiff

CHICAGO (AP) — It now seems that dispute between Chicago Bears' Coach Mike Ditka and quarterback Jim McMahon might be simmering down.

Ditka decided McMahon wasn't such a bad guy after all following a meeting they had Monday morning to iron out their "lack of communication."

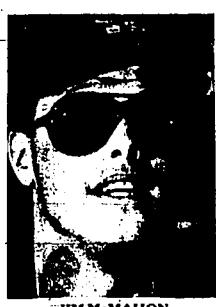
They agreed to blame the media.

McMahon told reporters they had a meeting "because you guys wanted us to." "You guys made up all the stuff about me being in the doghouse," McMahon said.

"All the problems are a figment of you guys' imagination," said Ditka in a separate news conference. "If he said he was in the doghouse, he's mistaken, because nobody's in my doghouse.

"My dogs aren't even in my doghouse. My dogs are in my house," Ditka said.

The two also agreed that injury, not personality, is what's bothering both of them.



JIM McMAHON
Doghouse?

McMahon said last Wednesday's re-injury to a hip flexor muscle in the groin area has set him back to Day 1 on rehabilitation.

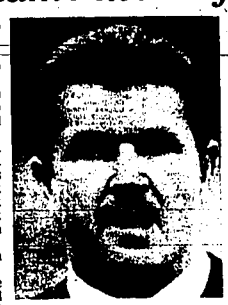
Instead of trying to run it off, McMahon said he will swim and do isometrics until he gets well. McMahon served as a ballboy in Monday's practice, handing the snap to quarterbacks Mike Tomczak and Steve Fuller.

Ditka and McMahon agrred that McMahon won't try to play against the St. Louis Cardinals in this week's exhibition game in Soldier Field, but might try the following week against Jim Kelly and the Buffalo Bills at Notre Dame, Ind., in the preseason finale.

"If it's not ready, see you in September," said McMahon.

"I hope he'll be ready for more than one quarter, but wishing and thinking are two different things," Ditka said. "If he's not, he's not."

If Ditka's will prevails, the Chicago Bears could be the first NFL team to repeat as Super Bowl champions since the Pittsburgh Steelers accomplished the feat seven years ago.



MIKE DITKA
What doghouse?

Ditka's cry to his Bears is "Are you satisfied?"

His own answer is "I'm not satisfied." And his task is "to get the players back down to earth" from the high of defeating New England 46-10 in last January's Super Bowl.

"They deserve to take some bows," said Ditka of the Bears' off-season activity.

"It's going to be tough," said Ditka. "It's been said that it's easier to win than it is to repeat, and a lot of good football teams have proven it. If they're satisfied, they'll be mediocre, but I don't think our people are satisfied, I haven't seen that."

Satisfied or not, the Bears should have no trouble repeating as champions of the NFC Central.

They didn't lose a single game to a division foe last year and have won 17 of their last 18 games in the division. Their 15-1 regular-season mark was seven games better than 8-8 Green Bay, the runner-up.

Bias

ed in the last months of his life, as he spent increasingly less time on campus and more time dealing with the pressures of a potential NBA superstar.

The facts are these: Police say three people were with Bias when he collapsed at about 6:30 a.m. in Washington Hall — basketball players Terry Long and David Gregg, and close friend Brian Lee Tribble. All have been indicted on drug charges, and Prince George's State's Attorney Arthur A. Marshall Jr. has said "evidence will show" Tribble provided the cocaine that killed Bias. Medical examiners originally said it was Bias' first experience with cocaine, then amended that statement, saying there is evidence that he used the drug before.

Those who knew Bias best are struck by the differing views of him that have emerged from the grand-jury investigation at the Upper Marlboro, Md., courthouse. Said someone who has known Bias as well as anyone the past eight years, "I don't know what's real and not real anymore. I thought I knew him."

One thing that confuses friends is that, if Bias were a regular drug user, it almost surely would have taken a toll on his physical condition. But Maryland trainer Frank Grimaldi said the morning Bias died, "Len could play a 40-minute game, then play an overtime, then give a 10-minute interview and never even breathe hard."

Terrence Lewis, one of Bias' closest childhood friends, said the two, shortly before Bias' death, had played basketball together at Columbia Park Recreation Center in Landover, Md., the neighborhood [illegible] both learned the game.

"Sometimes I'd say afterward, 'Let's get a drink,'" Lewis [illegible] "He'd say, 'No, I'm not drinking right now.' He was very [illegible] about what he put into [illegible] He was proud of his physique. He spoke about it, saying, 'I'm [illegible] anything to hurt this [illegible] physical specimen.'"

Brian Branch, Bias' teammate [illegible] friend at Maryland, said [illegible] was as protective of his reputation [illegible] he was of his body. "Len's [illegible] drug user," he said. "You don't build the reputation he had when you're doing drugs. He knew everything he did was magnified, everyone was looking in the cracks and crevices. He was a very private person. If he was going to do something to harm himself or embarrass himself, he'd stop and think about it."

But Barrette Palmer, a Maryland student and friend of some members of the team, said she smoked marijuana with Bias, Terry Long or David Gregg about 10 times. She said she used the drug about twice as many times with Long and Gregg.

According to Palmer, Tribble had offered her cocaine on one occasion during a phone conversation. They did not use the drug, and Tribble did not offer it again, she said. But Palmer, who testified before the grand jury last month, said she never saw or heard of Bias using cocaine.

Tribble and Bias enjoyed the nightlife at Chapter III, a popular Southeast Washington club. Lewis also went to Chapter III on a number of occasions this spring.

"Every time I went, Len was already there," he said. People who work at the club say Bias came in as many as four nights a week: Wednesday (ladies night), Thursday (free barbecue), Saturday and Sunday (come-as-you-are night). He rarely left before closing and usually with a woman. He frequently sat in front of the club asking women for age IDs and introducing himself. Always at his charming best.

Partying at Chapter III most of the spring semester didn't leave a lot of time for studying. Although Bias was 21 credits short of graduating, that did not necessarily mean he didn't intend to finish. As late as the end of May, he made arrangements with an academic counselor to get help on a paper due in summer school.

Walter Hill, who taught him in an Afro-American studies class as a sophomore, said, "I knew there were pressures on him as he blossomed. I think after a while Len realized he could get on with being a pro basketball player. He had his own agenda (academically)."

One thing seems clear: the better Bias became on a basketball court, the more that agenda changed. During Bias' first two seasons, the Terrapins were Branch's team. Also, Patrick Ewing was playing across town at Georgetown. Ralph Sampson and Michael Jordan were the marquee stars of the Atlantic Coast Conference. Len Bias was no star, not yet, at least.

He had picked up a reputation in high school, however, for having "an attitude." He'd whine about foul calls he didn't like and was accused of quick retaliation. But Bias worked hard to eliminate that behavior from his game. By his sophomore year, referees, reporters and opponents found him very likable.

By the end of last season, however, Bias seemed to revert to his earlier behavior, as the pressures of senior year in college mirrored those of senior year in high school. One oft-told story is of the time Bias went to his high school coach in tears because no one would talk to him about anything but where he was going to college. The same happened this past season, but with irritability instead of the tears, and he was sometimes described as surly.

Palmer described Bias as "frustrated" by increasing obligations. Often it seemed, according to one source, as if "everyone wanted a piece of him." He took a weekend off at the end of May and went to Virginia Beach to regain his composure, but as the draft approached he became cranky again.

"He was frustrated, confused," Palmer said. "It was very stressful. The phone never stopped ringing, he was going all over the place, living the fast life. He was trying to start a new life, but he wasn't there yet.

"One thing seems clear: the better Bias became on a basketball court, the more that agenda changed."

"A lot of girls were calling him; they all wanted to be the one because he was going to be rich and a star. That bothered him a lot. He'd say, 'I don't trust any women anymore. All they're interested in is money, money, money.'"

But Bias was not shy and he was known to revel in his new status as one of the best three players in college basketball. Former football player Donald Brown, a one-time roommate and friend, acknowledged that Bias became aware of his reputation. Brown remembers Bias saying, "This time next year we'll both be making some cash." He said, 'I bet you $1,000 I'm the No. 1 pick.'"

"There was no question he was the man," Brown said. "It's like, who runs the yard, who has the most girls? He was the man. He made all the pre-season All-American. They made a film about him. Around the gym he'd be pretty outgoing. He'd talk a lot. He'd brag on himself. But he was still an everyday athlete."

Keith Gatlin, who roomed with Bias on the road, recalled, "I used this thing where we would throw the light. Len would always refuse to throw the ball to."

"You, big fella."

"OK, now I can sleep."

By the end of the season, the pattern of Bias' life portended a perfect since he had all four years going to class, had developed, and he acquired the style of one about to become rich and famous. He did dozens of radio and television interviews and a number of charity appearances. He worked at two basketball camps and had meetings with a number of NBA team officials. He selected an agent. He hung out with Brian Lee Tribble — a lot.

"They were very close," Palmer said. "They'd go clubbing, picking up girls. Like a normal group of college people trying to have some fun."

In April, Palmer played in a pickup basketball game on campus with Bias, Tribble and Johnnie Walker, a childhood friend who became a District of Columbia police officer. She remembers numerous phone conversations between Bias and Tribble. Six months ago, Tribble — who raises pit bulldogs as a hobby — presented Bias a puppy as a gift. Bias named it Ebony and bought it a red leather collar with spikes.

When Tribble was preparing to pick out a silver Mercedes-Benz, Bias accompanied him on at least one occasion to look at the car. On May 16, Tribble was stopped on Maryland's campus in the Mercedes and was found to have a suspended license, so he was not allowed to drive off. The other passenger in the car, Bias, drove it away.

Some of Bias' closer friends now say they wondered about the company he was keeping. But many, including Lewis, chose not to mention it to him.

"I believed in Len's judgment," Lewis said. "I knew he wasn't that type. He'd say, 'When people see me I'm always with Johnnie Walker and he's a cop, so how can people think I'm doing anything wrong?'"

Walker, who drove Bias' car and removed his belongings from the dormitory suite the morning of his death, testified before the grand jury. His attorney, Robert Maltz, said Walker "feels sort of betrayed by his friend (Bias). He had absolutely no knowledge of any drug use. They talked about it. Their discussions were like, 'Look what's happened to X, Y or Z; that's what drugs will do to you.' Johnnie feels like this is another side to (Bias) that he had never seen."

About five months ago, Tribble accompanied Bias to Silver Spring (Md.) Jewelry Manufacturing, where Bias had made a number of purchases over four years. Ramon Garcia, the store's owner, said he made several sales to Bias in the spring, including a heavy 14-karat gold chain in May for $1,300 on a layaway plan. Bias, who said he wanted to have the chain in time for a TV interview, put down some cash and arranged to pay $200 a month. He still owed $300 when he died.

Bias also had a $150 nameplate made for a female friend and paid $400 at another store to have a nameplate made for his diamond ID bracelet. There were lots of women for whom to buy jewels. So many, in fact, that Gatlin said laughingly: "I'd just say hi and wave to them. Because I didn't want to call her Mary if her name was Sara."

Bias' extravagance was no secret. The money from two personal loans for $21,000 that he acquired this spring went quickly. He leased a Nissan 300ZX sports car, paid insurance on the car, obtained two $1 million disability insurance policies, bought several new suits and a stereo worth between $500 and $600, and even paid some veterinarian bills for Ebony.

Bias also could be frugal. He'd save meal money to buy clothes or jewelry, and even wanted to work for more money. Lewis recalled Bias saying two weeks before the draft that he wanted a job. "He said, 'I want a real job, like you guys,'" Lewis said. "He had a lot of free time and he was tired of waiting for the draft, and he was a little bored, I think."

Only a few days before he was to be drafted and become nearly an instant millionaire, Bias went to John Brown, the owner of Bentley's, a restaurant near campus, and told Brown he was running low on funds.

"I need some work," he said.

"Why don't you get a loan, borrow some money from a bank?" Brown said he told Bias.

"That comes too easy," Brown remembered Bias saying. "I want to earn some."

Brown gave Bias some yardwork to do at a nearby office building he owns, watering the lawn and trimming hedges.

"People would call up and say, 'Do you know Len Bias is out here watering the lawn?'" Brown said. "It got to be kind of a joke. In a week he was going to be a millionaire, and he was doing yardwork."

Officials' meeting tonight

TWIN FALLS — A rules meeting for all District 4 volleyball officials will be held tonight at O'Leary Junior High School.

The session will start at 7 p.m. All officials should attend and coaches are welcome.

Coloradan sets CP Open pace

JACKPOT — Bob Rumbaugh of Colorado Springs, Colo., carded a seven-over-par 79 to pace all scorers through the first day of the $30,000 Cactus Pete's Open Tuesday.

"I had just 25 putts and that pretty much was the story of this round," said Rumbaugh, who usually participates in three Cactus Pete's sponsored events a year.

Rumbaugh's 79 was tops in the second flight as only the second, third and fourth flights are participating in the first two days of the tournament. The professional field and low handicap amateurs will take to the course Thursday morning after the 15 and over handicap groups have completed their competition.

Rumbaugh will take a two-stroke lead over Allen Brooks, Twin Falls, and three on Mike Kelly and Don Whitney of Jackpot in the second flight gross chase.

Richard Chase leads the third flight with an 83, two ahead of Bob Fox and Max Coffman while Dean Adams and Wayne Walls stayed in contention at 86 and 87, respectively.

Fourth flight leader is Bob Kolbert with 90 gross and a 59 net. But he'll have to give up one of those titles today with Ogden, Utah's, Vic Peterson, who had a 91 gross, still challenging in both divisions. It was another five strokes back to Don Curtin and Charles Denney.

Eagle youth wins IJGA title

JEROME — Andy Swenson of Eagle carded a two-day total of 144 to take top honors in the Idaho Junior Golf Association State Tournament Tuesday at the Jerome Country Club.

Swenson shot a 75 here Tuesday, following a 69 in the first round of the tournament on Monday at the Twin Falls Municipal Golf Course, to win the championship in the boys' 16-17-year-old division. Bill Heffner of Salmon, who also had a 69 Monday at Muni, wound up with a 79 on Tuesday to finish second in the boys' 14-15 division to Brett Barry of Twin Falls, who shot 74 on Tuesday to go with his 73 of Monday for a two-round total of 147.

Top girls' score was turned in by Jennifer Harper of Ketchum, who won the 16-17 division with a two-day total of 185.

Paterno

Meanwhile, most of Paterno's 1985 squad is returning — 19 of the top 22 players on offense; 18 of 22 on defense.

"I don't think we have any trouble offensively," said Paterno, starting his 21st season as head coach here. "We were starting to play well offensively at the end of last year. We played well until the Oklahoma game when we committed five turnovers."

Paterno says the quarterback job is wide open between John Shaffer and Matt Knizner, but insiders believe he will stick with Shaffer, who, despite inconsistent passing, led the Lions to an unbeaten season until the Orange Bowl flop.

State has fine runners in D.J. Dozier and David Clark, power fullbacks Steve Smith and Tim Manoa, experienced flankers in Michael Timpson, Eric Hamilton and Sid Lewis. All are seniors except Timpson, a sophomore.

The defensive line is considered the team's strength. All four starters, ends Don Graham and Bob White, tackles Tim Johnson and Mike Russo are back. The linebacking corps led by Shane Conlan and Terry Bauer is intact. Cornerbacks Duffy Cobb and Ray Isom lead a deep and talented secondary.

Also returning are field-goal kicker Massimo Manca, who had 21 plus 38 conversions for 91 points, and punter John Bruno, with a 42.9 average.

Penn State, with an 11-0 record, went to the Orange Bowl as the No. 1-ranked team in the nation last season, but lost 25-10 to Oklahoma and finished the season ranked third.

"We came off the Orange Bowl game disappointed that we came that close and didn't get the job done," Paterno said. "We played hard enough but not well enough."

However, with 37 of last year's top 44 players returning, there are high hopes for this season. Paterno isn't even worried about talent; it's attitude and desire that concern him.

"I got to see how they respond to certain challenges," he said. "And then I can tell you if they're coming off last season hungry or whether we're coming off fat-headed."

Paterno said many times last season that he felt his 1985 team over-achieved. He said that on his calendar, 1986 was the year the Lions would contend for a national title.

"Now, I don't know," said Paterno, who is starting his 21st season at Penn State as the second-leading winner among active coaches. "If we had not done as well last year, we'd be in a better position.

"The kids have to understand how tough it's going to be even to come close to what they did last year. If they're willing to go at it, we'll be a good football team. Whether we can go through a regular season with as good a record is very debatable."

Paterno said the Lions could play as well as they did last year and still lose four games because of a schedule that includes Alabama, Notre Dame, West Virginia and Boston College, all away, and Pitt, Syracuse, Maryland, Temple, Rutgers, Cincinnati and East Carolina at home.

"I think the schedule is tougher, not that the names have changed, but I think a lot of people we play are going to be tougher," Paterno said.

"There are some coaching changes (notably at Notre Dame and Pitt) which are tough to evaluate. You don't know exactly what to expect. I think this season is more of a challenge to the coaching staff."

Paterno said he doesn't expect any trouble offensively with 19 of the best 22 players returning among the 131 that reported for the first practices last week.

"It's a question of being more productive with the passing game," Paterno said.

The kicking game returns senior Massimo Manca, who had 21 field goals and 38 conversions for 91 points, and punter John Bruno, a 42.9 average kicker.

Paterno's conclusion that he has the makings of "a very fine football team," drew a laugh from Temple Coach Bruce Arians.

"Why play the season? Let Penn State play Oklahoma, or Alabama and decide the national championship," said Arians, whose Temple team is the Lions' 100th football season opener Sept. 6.

AL: Angels split, but gain ½ game in West

Baseball

DETROIT (AP) — Lou Whitaker had a bases-loaded double and drove in five runs in the second game Tuesday night to help the Detroit Tigers beat California 8-3 and split their doubleheader with the Angels.

The split, combined with Texas' loss to Kansas City Tuesday, gave the Angels a full five-game lead in the American League West.

Whitaker's two-run homer in the opener gave him seven RBI for the night.

Bob Boone hit a two-run homer and run-scoring double and Doug DeCinces had a single, double and run-scoring triple as the Angels beat the Tigers 5-2 in the first game.

Randy O'Neal, 3-7, gave up seven hits and four walks in the nightcap, striking out five batters in his second career complete game. Vern Ruhle, 1-2, gave up five runs on six hits in the 3⅓ innings he worked for California.

Pat Sheridan and Tom Brookens each singled, Mike Heath beat out a bunt to load the bases and Whitaker doubled into the left-field corner, driving in three runs. After a sacrifice by Dave Collins, Whitaker made it 4-1 when he scored on a wild pitch.

Whitaker singled Sheridan across in the Detroit sixth. Darrell Evans doubled Kirk Gibson across and Darnell Coles hit his 14th homer with the bases empty in the Detroit seventh.

The Angels got a run in the first when Gary Pettis doubled, moved up and scored on a sacrifice fly by Wally Joyner. A double by Joyner drove in Pettis in the fifth and Jack Howell hit a solo homer, his fourth, in the eighth for the Angels.

In the first game, Kirk McCaskill, 13-7, gave up four hits and five walks in 7 ⅓ innings as the Angels won their fourth straight, ruining the return of Detroit's Dan Petry. Donnie Moore gave up one hit as he finished for his 15th save.

Petry, 4-6, was making his first appearance since undergoing surgery for bone chips in his right elbow June 10. He gave up three runs, two earned, on seven hits in the five innings he worked.

The Angels scored two runs in the first and one in the second.

After two were out in the first, Petry walked Brian Downing and Reggie Jackson singled Downing to third. Downing scored on a passed ball y catcher Dwight Lowry and Jackson came around on DeCinces' triple.

Rick Burleson singled in California's second inning and reached second base on a throwing error by shortstop Alan Trammell, whose throw hit Burleson during a rundown. Burleson scored on Boone's double for a 3-0 lead.

Whitaker made it 3-2 in the third with his 17th home run of the year, a two-run shot with Lowry on board.

Kansas City 9
Texas 8

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — Frank White led off the bottom of the 11th inning with his second home run of the game, driving in his seventh run of the night and giving the Kansas City Royals a 9-8 victory over the Texas Rangers Tuesday.

White, who earlier rallied the Royals back from a 7-1 deficit, hit his 16th home run of the season on a 2-1 count off reliever Dale Mohorcic, 1-1. Mohorcic was appearing in his 12th straight game, one short of the major-league record.

Dan Quisenberry, 1-4, pitched a perfect two innings for the win.

White's seven RBI were a career high. He hit a three-run homer in a five-run sixth that gave Kansas City an 8-7 lead, but Texas tied the game in the seventh.

Ruben Sierra hit his eighth triple of the season — a club record — and scored on Don Slaught's single off reliever Dennis Leonard.

Pete O'Brien doubled with two out in the first and scored on Pete Incaviglia's single, but White drove in Brett with a single, tying the game, in the bottom of the first.

Scott Fletcher singled home two runs as Texas batted around in a four-run second inning. Oddibe McDowell had an RBI double and Gary Ward singled for another run. The Rangers went ahead 7-1 in the fourth on RBI singles by Larry Parrish and Sierra.

White doubled home two runs, bringing the Royals to within 7-3 in the fifth. Lonnie Smith doubled in a run in the sixth and scored as Greg Pryor hit into a fielder's choice before White hit his 14th homer of the season.

Royals' interim manager Mike Ferrero was ejected in a first inning argument with second base umpire Rich Garcia, who had called Smith out trying to steal.

George Brett was thrown out in the sixth by third base umpire Dale Ford for disputing Ford's call that O'Brien had not swung at a pitch.

Minnesota 5
Boston 1

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — Kirby Puckett and Kent Hrbek homered consecutively in the third inning and Gary Gaetti added a two-run homer in the sixth, leading the Minnesota Twins to a 5-1 victory over the Boston Red Sox Tuesday night.

Puckett, Hrbek and Gaetti each hit his 25th homer of the season as Minnesota ended a four-game losing streak. The Twins, who lead the majors with 154 homers, are the only team with three 25-homer men.

Mark Portugal, 4-8, gave up a run on nine hits and two walks in 7⅔ innings. George Frazier pitched 1⅓ hitless innings for his first save with Minnesota.

The Red Sox still lead New York by 6½ games in the American League East.

Puckett went 3-for-4 to move past Boston's Wade Boggs in the major-league batting race. Puckett is batting .349; Boggs, who went 1-for-5, is batting .348.

With two out and the bases empty in the third, Puckett lifted Nipper's 1-2 pitch over the center-field fence, breaking a scoreless tie. Four pitches later, Hrbek lined a shot that was measured 477 feet to right-center field.

NEW YORK (AP) — Mark Langston pitched a five-hitter and struck out 11 and Danny Tartabull lined a three-run homer Tuesday night, giving the Seattle Mariners a 7-3 victory over the New York Yankees.

Langston, 10-10, broke his five-game losing streak with his first triumph since June 30, a span of 10 starts.

Langston overcame a shaky first inning in which he walked two batters and gave up Dan Pasqua's three-run homer.

He then retired 15 straight batters, striking out 11 of them, before Don Mattingly singled with two outs in the sixth. Mike Pagliarulo singled with two outs in the seventh for the Yankees' other hit.

Seattle won its fourth straight game as Langston, a left-hander who turns 26 Wednesday, improved his career record against the Yankees to 3-6.

Tommy John, 5-2, took the loss, his third in 14 lifetime decisions versus Seattle. He had pitched 15 straight shutout innings in winning twice since coming off the disabled list on Aug. 8, but allowed four runs on seven hits in 4 2-3 innings against Seattle.

Tartabull's 22nd home run of the season, off reliever Brian Fisher, capped a four-run fifth that rallied the Mariners into a 5-3 lead.

Oakland 4
Baltimore 1

BALTIMORE (AP) — Dave Stewart gave up four hits in 7 2-3 innings and Mike Davis and Dave Kingman singled in runs to lead the Oakland A's to a 4-1 win over Baltimore Tuesday night, the Orioles' fourth straight loss.

Stewart, 6-1, struck out five and walked one as he won for the fifth time in his last six starts. The run he gave up was unearned. Jay Howell finished for his 11th save.

Storm Davis, 9-10, allowed six hits and single runs in the second, fourth and seventh innings before being relieved in the eighth.

Cleveland 3

CLEVELAND (AP) — Paul Molitor hit two home runs and two doubles and Ted Higuera won his 16th game as the Milwaukee Brewers defeated Cleveland 5-3 Tuesday night, ending the Indians' four-game winning streak.

Molitor went 4-for-4, with his homers in the first and seventh innings. He doubled and scored in the third, and doubled a run home in the ninth.

Higuera, 16-8, left after giving up 11 hits and three walks in 7⅓ innings. Mark Clear gave up a foul sacrifice fly to Mel Hall, then finished for his 12th save.

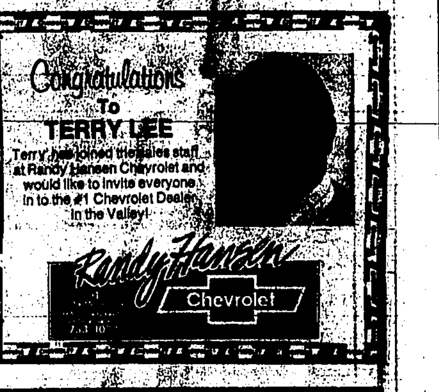
With the game tied 2-2 in the fifth, Bill Schroeder led off with a double against Cleveland starter Jose Roman, 1-2. Molitor sacrificed Schroeder to third before Robin Yount's single put Milwaukee ahead to stay 3-2.

Molitor's second homer was his eighth of the season. He has a 12-game hitting streak over which he is batting .347 with 14 RBI.

Toronto 5
Chicago 1

TORONTO (AP) — Lloyd Moseby went 4-for-4 with two RBIs, Willie Upshaw homered and Dave Stieb and Tom Henke checked Chicago on five hits, leading the Toronto Blue Jays to a 5-1 victory over the White Sox on Tuesday night.

Stieb, 4-10, hadn't won since he beat Kansas City on July 29. He allowed baserunners in all but two of his seven innings and walked four while striking out five.



NL: Astros go up by 7 with Deshaies' shutout

Kevin Bass hit his 18th home run, and Deshaies combined with Dave Smith on a four-hitter as Houston pitching continued its mastery of the Pittsburgh Pirates with a 1-0 victory Tuesday night.

The victory gave the Astros a full seven-game lead in the National League West over the San Francisco Giants pending the Giants' late game with Philadelphia Tuesday night on the West Coast.

Deshaies got the first two outs of the ninth inning and Manager Hal Lanier called on Smith to face Jim Morrison.

"I know that Jim wanted to finish but I can't go for sentiment," Lanier said. "The game comes first. Morrison's a dead fastball hitter and Jim's a fastball pitcher. I've got a guy in the bullpen with 24 saves and I've got to make the move."

"I don't agree but I accept it," Deshaies said. "I think I could finish. Any pitcher thinks he can finish with one out to go. But you have a righthanded hitter and a righthanded relief pitcher who's one of the best in the game."

Smith got Morrison to fly to center to end the game.

Houston pitchers now have shut out Pittsburgh for 33 consecutive innings. Mike Scott shut out Pittsburgh on four hits to start the three-game series Monday night, and Bob Knepper pitched a seven-hit shutout the last time the two clubs met on May 22 in Houston.

"They have a team that can score runs," Lanier said. "We were 3-3 against them coming into this series. They've had two outstanding games pitched against them. I think you have to give credit where it's due."

Deshaies, 8-3, won for the seventh time in his last eight decisions, giving up four hits and striking out nine.

Bass led off the second with a home run over the right field wall against starter Mike Bielecki, 6-9. Bielecki has lost his last four decisions and is winless in his last eight appearances since July 9th.

"You have to give the other guy credit tonight," Bielecki said. "That's why they're in first place. They have a great pitching staff. I got one ball up, one mistake and he hit it out."

Pittsburgh's best scoring opportunity came in the second when Jim Morrison led off with a double, but was thrown out at the plate by center fielder Billy Hatcher when he tried to score on Tony Pena's single.

The Astros won for the ninth time in the last 12 games.

San Diego 7
Montreal 1

SAN DIEGO (AP) — Kevin McReynolds drove in a career-high five runs with a three-run homer, a single and a sacrifice fly to lead the San Diego Padres past the Montreal Expos 7-1 Tuesday night.

With one out in the third inning, McReynolds gave the Padres a 5-0 lead with his 16th home run of the season, off Bryn Smith, 8-8. Tim Flannery had walked to lead off the inning and Tony Gwynn followed with a single.

Flannery and Gwynn also started San Diego's two-run first inning. After Flannery walked and Gwynn singled, McReynolds knocked in one run with a single, and the second run scored on a grounder by Steve Garvey.

Cincinnati 6
St. Louis 1

CINCINNATI (AP) — Nick Esasky and Eric Davis hit home runs to help Tom Browning win for the first time in a month with a four-hitter, sending the Cincinnati Reds to a 6-1 victory Tuesday night over the St. Louis Cardinals.

Esasky's sixth-inning homer, a two-run shot to center field, snapped a 1-1 tie and let the left-hander Browning even his record at 10-10. Browning had lost three in a row, his last victory coming July 18.

Davis hit his 17th home run to lead off Cincinnati's three-run eighth inning. Tony Perez also drove in a run with a triple, and Esasky hit a sacrifice fly for his third RBI.

Atlanta 7
Chicago 2

CHICAGO (AP) — Doyle Alexander pitched a complete game, hit a sacrifice fly and keyed a three-run fourth inning with a double and Omar Moreno drove in two runs, leading the Atlanta Braves to a 7-2 triumph over the Chicago Cubs Tuesday.

Alexander, 3-4, hit a sacrifice fly to tie the game 1-1 in the second inning after Ozzie Virgil walked and advanced to third on a single by Glenn Hubbard.

With two outs in the fourth, Hubbard singled and went to third on a double by Alexander. Moreno drove in both runners with a single and then scored on a double by Dale Murphy.

New York 6
Los Angeles 4

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Ron Darling won for the fifth time in six decisions and scored the tie-breaking run after doubling in the sixth inning as the New York Mets defeated the Los Angeles Dodgers 6-4 Tuesday night.

Rookie Kevin Mitchell hit a two-run homer, Lenny Dykstra drove in Darling to break a 4-4 tie with one out in the sixth and Darryl Strawberry drove in an insurance run in the ninth with his third hit, a single.

Darling, 12-4, starting for the first time in his career at Dodger Stadium, allowed eight hits in seven innings and struck out four. Roger McDowell pitched the final 1⅔ innings for his 14th save.

Turn garden bounty into delicious dishes

Chef combines vegetables, herbs and cereals to create tasty meals

There they are, popping out all over the vegetable garden, overflowing from the bushel baskets at the farm stand, the delicious harvest of summer: plump scarlet tomatoes, brilliant red and green peppers, polished purple eggplant and squash galore — emerald zucchini and yellow crookneck, in sizes from midget to giant.

The herbs, too, are there — basil, chives, dillweed, parsley — shooting up in carefully tended garden plots or window boxes, thriving in pots at roadside stands and tied up in generous bundles at the supermarket produce section.

Chef Kathleen Sanderson has put her creative talents to work to come up with new dishes that use these wonderful vegetables. Her recipes combine summer vegetables with herbs and Post cereals to bring out all their goodness. Here is her versatile quintet of summer vegetable dishes.

CURRIED STUFFED ZUCCHINI

2 large (or 3 medium) zucchini
3 tablespoons olive oil
1 medium onion, diced
2 medium tomatoes, cored and diced
1 cup Fruit & Fibre whole wheat and bran cereal with raisins, pineapple, peanuts and coconut
1½ teaspoons curry powder
¼ cup chopped parsley*
¼ teaspoon salt
¼ teaspoon pepper
*Or use 4 teaspoons parsley flakes.

Halve zucchini lengthwise and remove seeds; brush with a little olive oil and place on a 15x10x1-inch baking pan.

Saute onion in remaining olive oil until tender; add tomatoes and cook until mixture is dry. Crush cereal and add with curry powder, parsley, salt and pepper; mix well and cool.

Divide stuffing among zucchini halves. Pour ¼ cup water into pan around zucchini; cover tightly with foil. (This will help steam the zucchini.) Bake at 375 degrees for 10 to 12 minutes; then remove foil and bake 10 minutes longer.

Makes 4 to 6 servings.

HERB STUFFED MUSHROOMS
(Not shown)

16 large mushrooms

4 tablespoons butter or margarine
¼ cup sherry or Madeira wine

2 tablespoons chopped chives*
1 tablespoon chopped dillweed*
⅛ teaspoon pepper
¼ cup grated Parmesan cheese
*Or use 4 teaspoons parsley flakes, 2 teaspoons freeze-dried chives and 1 teaspoon dried dillweed.

Remove stems from mushrooms and chop finely. Saute onion and mushroom stems in 2 tablespoons butter for 2 to 3 minutes. Add sherry and cook until wine is absorbed and mixture is dry. Crush cereal and combine with herbs, pepper and cheese. Add to mushroom stems and mix well.

Melt remaining 2 tablespoons butter; brush over mushroom caps. Place 1½ to 2 tablespoons of mixture in each mushroom and place on baking sheet. Bake at 375 degrees for 10 to 12 minutes; then broil 1 minute or until browned.

Slice tomatoes ½-inch thick and arrange in a 13x9-inch casserole. Pour olive oil evenly over tomatoes and season with pepper. Top with cereal mixture. Bake at 400 degrees for 12 to 15 minutes.

RATATOUILLE AU GRATIN

Beer goes flat with China's youth, says touring educator

By GARRY ABRAMS
Los Angeles Times

This sidelight on a liquid aspect of foreign relations comes from an associate professor of education at the Claremont Graduate School, 35 miles east of Los Angeles. Joseph Weeres spent a month this summer touring more than 30 breweries in the People's Republic, exploring the folkways of beer consumption and production.

While he was poking around vats from Shanghai to Kunming, Weeres also was learning that the beverage — which has been around since about 6000 BC — is taking a beating with China's younger generation.

"What was interesting in China was almost everyone we met who was under, say, 30 had a negative view of beer and they had derived that perception from viewing Americans and Europeans," Weeres said. "They are convinced — at least the ones we talked to in every city we went to — that beer makes you fat.

"They see Americans who are eating in the government-run restaurants consuming their local beers. ... The age group of Americans who are traveling in China are in their late 50s, early 60s. It's a generation of people who aren't that weight-conscious. They look old, they look fat, they don't look very healthy and these young kids see these people and say, 'Hey, that's what Americans look like.' ... They think Americans drink too much beer."

Weeres, a slim man of 46 who has brewed his own beer for 25 years, is still chuckling over the fact that he was given money to learn this kind of stuff. He received a $5,000 grant from the American-Chinese Adventure Capital Program to pay for the jaunt through 15 cities and about double that number of breweries. His wife, Lee, a microbacteriologist, paid her own way.

The grants, administered by the Durfee Foundation of Los Angeles and ranging from $2,000 to $25,000, were available on a one-time basis to staffers at a number of colleges, libraries and museums who were interested in "avocational pursuits" that would help "cement a special personal relationship with China."

Weeres admits he was looking for a subsidized way to get to China and that most of his friends laughed at the idea. Yet when Weeres talks about beer, it is evident that he takes the subject seriously. He said he has a "fascination with the subtleties of the taste" of the various kinds of beer, adding that his family was in the beer-making business until Prohibition.

Armed with the "three paragraphs" of information he had gleaned from the college library about Chinese beer, Weeres wrote a three-page application in which he asked "to learn more about beer making in China, with a special emphasis on the adaptation of beer brewing to the cultural and culinary expectations of the local populations."

To Weeres' mild surprise, his application was approved. "I thought there was a slim chance they'd fund it. I thought they'd fund one off-the-wall, kind of whimsical project."

The more salient points:

—Beer in China comes mainly in bottles of about 21 ounces. It is weak, often slightly sour and low in alcohol content, probably about 2 percent. It costs the equivalent of about 50 cents a bottle, expensive by Chinese standards where workers are usually paid much less than $100 a month. Price may be one reason why the average Chinese drinks less than a gallon of beer per year while the average American gulps down 21 gallons a year, Weeres said.

"The taste varied more than I expected," Weeres said. "Partly that's the kind of grain they added to the barley. In the southern part of China you find rice in the beer. The barley varies and I imagine the water supply. Some of the beers have a chlorine taste. But when I asked if they had chlorine in the water, they said no."

Chinese export beers, Weeres said, are brewed to satisfy international tastes and those such as Tsingtao are only "average imitations" of German beers. The beer that most closely resembles domestic Chinese beer is a Mexican brew called Pacifico, he said.

Randi Morgan holds a painting of her lookalike, Betty Crocker

... please stand up

[illegible] (AP) — When General Mills introduced a modern Betty Crocker, it said she was not based on a real woman. That didn't keep columnist Bob Greene from seeking a true-life version of the [illegible] of home baking.

[illegible] Greene said when he saw the drawing of the Betty Crocker unveiled in June, he was "consumed with lustful feelings." After some readers expressed similar feelings in a string of letters, he started the quest.

A photograph of a flesh-and-blood Randi Morgan, who bears a striking resemblance to the drawing on General Mills' cake mix boxes, appeared in the column alongside the drawing.

"I was resigned to the fact that there was not going to be a winner. ... And then — just as I was about to write the column admitting defeat — the [illegible] came," he wrote in the syndicated column.

"And she was Betty Crocker. There was no [illegible] it. Randi Morgan was Betty Crocker. All of those would-be Betty Crockers, sending their photographs from all those distant places, and it turns out that Betty Crocker — Randi Morgan — works less than a mile from my office."

"A photographer friend of mine [illegible] the contest and about two weeks ago, I finally did it," she said.

Asked whether there was a prize for winning the lookalike contest, she replied, "As far as I know, this is it, except for a few phone calls from the press and some old friends.

"I also got a package with a photocopy of a recipe for Black Midnight Cake and all the ingredients in separate bags and containers, but I have no idea why or from whom," she said.

"I guess I can still hope for a call from General Mills," Ms. Morgan said.

General Mills considers the contest "wonderful" but has no plans "to take advantage of the resemblance," said company spokesman Bill Shafter in Minneapolis.

Feeding kids takes artful planning

Nancy Joy Jones
Valley cooking

You've seen the ads of everyone sitting around the breakfast table eating the same things and talking about the coming day.

I think that tableau happened twice in my 26 years of married life.

If we were lucky to get everybody in and out of the bathrooms in time and all sitting down together, the only thing that got a unanimous vote was the orange juice, and then someone said someone else got more.

I never made French toast right for one. Another didn't like hot cereal in any form, and I really blew it by adding raisins. She was totally "grossed-out" for the next two days. There was one that ate almost everything he could lay his hands on for about two weeks back in 1978, and one that never in 17 years has eaten a decent breakfast.

I really don't know the answer to getting kids to eat a nutritious breakfast, except just putting the best and healthiest ingredients in front of them each morning and assuming the correct nutritional balance will probably happen every 30 days.

Back to school is really nice for mom and cooking. She can now plan ahead a bit and get on a sort of regular schedule for meals.

What do you do when the kids come tromping home from school hungry as trolls and about as cranky?

Plan now, and here are a few things you can try. First, pick up some of those handy plastic containers that come in different sizes. You can find them in your supermarket. You might want to decorate them with permanent felt tip markers and even personalize one for each child. Get ones for liquids and others that will hold "treats."

Train your kids to go to these snack boxes after school. Their special treat for that particular day will be inside, and that is what they can eat before dinner — that and nothing else.

There are creative ways to solve refund mailing problems

BY MARTIN SLOANE
United Feature Syndicate

Dear Martin — You published a letter from a woman whose rural route "relatives" often received her refunds because the fulfillment companies addressed them using her first initial, rather than her full first name. I, too, had this problem and came up with a nice solution that I would like to share with you.

When I fill in a refund request form, I place my first name in parenthesis, after the address on the street-address line. So my street address reads: "R.R. No. 1 (Margaret)." Even if the fulfillment service uses my first initial, the postman spots my first name on the street address line, and I get my refund. — Margaret Cooper, Moscow, Kan.

Dear Margaret — Fulfillment companies instruct their typists to use first initials because this saves time. But it also causes problems for some people. Your method works because addresses are not shortened.

Will the fulfillment companies complain to me for letting my readers in on your secret? Possibly. But these companies should realize that when they take the license to shorten names, refunders who are inconvenienced have the right to duplicate the information that is being abbreviated.

Dear Martin — I read the letter in your column from Mrs. Biswell, who complained about a grocer who refused to give her a register tape, but I was a little disappointed in your answer.

When a store refuses to give a receipt, I think it automatically signals that something improper may be going on. The only reason I can think of for such a refusal is that the cashier may be overcharging the customer.

Can you think of any other reason? — Barbara Runyan, Radcliff, Ky.

Supermarket shopper

Dear Barbara — I reread my answer to Mrs. Biswell. I was emphatic enough in stating that she had a right to a receipt, but I can understand why you feel that my answer was incomplete. I did not consider what reasons the store might have for being reluctant to provide register tapes.

I have spoken with my sources in the supermarket industry, and they have not come up with any other reason, so I have a strong inclination to agree with you. It does sound like something shoddy is going on and the store does not want any evidence of overcharges.

This is a situation where the proper authorities should be called in to investigate.

THE SMART SHOPPER AWARD goes to Josephine Presti of Hamden, Conn.: "I purchased a 64-ounce carton of Tropicana Orange Juice, regularly priced $1.98, on sale for $1.29. The store doubled my 50-cent coupon, so I paid just 29 cents. But my savings aren't over. On the side of the carton, I found another 50-cent coupon, and I have a $1 refund form that I will use as soon as I have four Tropicana Universal Product Code symbols."

Then plan your week of treats. You can bake one batch of cookies and use them two or three times. Use the wholesome varieties of peanut butter or oatmeal cookies. Another thing might be a muffin, a mini-sandwich or a cupcake.

That plus a piece of fruit, jello squares, carrot sticks, stuffed celery sticks, fruited yogurt or even popcorn can help to tide the kids over, get their blood sugar up to a holding pattern for dinner and keep the mess to a minimum.

It's also a perfect setup for moms that aren't home when the kids get there. You can plan these ahead, fill the containers when you're doing breakfast and either set them in the refrigerator (if needed) or out on the counter for when the kids come home.

When they get old enough to read and follow directions, you can also leave things to be heated in the microwave or toaster. Have plenty of milk handy and fill the pitchers with juice.

It may take some time, but if you are firm and tell your children that what's in their containers is all they can have between meals, they'll soon get used to the healthier fare.

I was raised by a working mom who often packed a snack with a list of chores and then fun things to do at the bottom. (Yes, this was pre-TV). I'll admit her ideas of fun were sometimes not the same as mine, but we managed. I finally got her trained better!

She was always afraid I wouldn't come straight home, so the standing orders were for me to call her at work as soon as I got home. I always wondered how she knew I was home and not goofing off at a friend's house. It wasn't until years later she told me about the old, loud-ticking alarm clock that sat by the phone. She could hear it ticking in the background and knew I was home.

Pretty clever, these moms!

APPLE-PEANUT-RAISIN GOODY

1 medium-sized apple
8 teaspoons peanut butter
8 teaspoons raisins, chopped or whole (optional)

Cut apple into 8 slices and remove core. Spread one side of each slice with 1 teaspoon peanut butter and sprinkle with raisins.

LOTS OF COOKIES RECIPE
(Makes about 8 dozen. Preheat oven to 350 degrees.)

2 cups all-purpose flour
1 teaspoon baking soda
½ teaspoon salt
1 tablespoon ground cinnamon
1 cup lightly salted butter or margarine, room temperature
¾ cup light brown sugar, firmly packed
2 large eggs
1 teaspoon vanilla extract
2 cups finely chopped walnuts
1 cup dark seedless raisins
3 cups old-fashioned rolled oats

Mix flour with baking soda, salt and cinnamon. In a separate large bowl beat butter and sugar until pale and fluffy. Add eggs one at a time beating well after each addition. Mix in vanilla and add nuts, raisins and oats and mix well.

Now mix in flour mixture. This dough will be stiff. Form heaping teaspoons of dough into balls and put about 2 inches apart on lightly greased baking sheet. Bake 10 to 12 minutes until lightly brown. These cookies don't spread but stay in the ball shape.

These keep tightly covered for about 1 week at room temperature or freeze to parcel out as needed.

Enjoy!

Beer

—Largely because of transportation and distribution problems, beer production is very much a local affair. Each city tends to have its own brewery. The breweries are relatively modern-looking, extremely clean and equipped with stainless-steel vats and copper tubing. Weeres said he expected to find some facilities that looked as if they were out of the 18th century.

—A few breweries in China specialize in making herbal beers, usually by adding ginseng. Ginseng-flavored beers are touted as therapeutic for cardiovascular problems. However, Weeres said he was disappointed to learn that there is much less herbal beer-brewing than he expected. (To remedy this gap in his knowledge, Weeres plans to brew his own herbal beers.)

—When it comes to drinking beer, the Chinese usually share a bottle among several people. They also will resort to mixing beer with an orange-flavored drink to stretch out the suds. Weeres said he declined to try this mixture.

Despite the shortcomings of Chinese brewing, Weeres said he "fell in love with the country" and is eager to return.

Books instruct Westerners how to cook Japanese cuisine

BY MINNIE BERNARDINO
Los Angeles Times

The boom in Japanese restaurant dining is reflected in the number of books on Japanese cooking that have appeared recently. In flipping through these books, the artistic values of food, its preparation and presentation seem to be the theme of most of the authors. Here are four outstanding examples:

"Step-By-Step Japanese Cooking" (Barron's; $24.95, 192 pages), is written by Lesley Downer, Japanese chef, and food writer Minoru Yoneda, head chef at the Yamato Restaurant in North London. The authors write: "In Japan, food has perhaps a wider significance than in the West. It is not just to fill the stomach and keep the body working: It has an aesthetic, ritual and social role to play too."

For Western cooks this aesthetic element in Japanese cuisine makes it seem difficult to prepare it at home. The authors collected traditional as well as popular recipes, which they beautifully illustrate in the book in finished stages. They also provide some how-to photographs, making it easy for the home cook to follow the recipes.

The book is divided into "Basics" and "Recipes." Included in the "Basics" section are typical Japanese ingredients and utensils illustrated in full color. There is also a chapter on preparatory techniques, which includes photograph illustrations on slicing fish and poultry, as well as artful sculpting of vegetables. The section on Japanese menu planning, table presentation and etiquette is truly of creative value.

The "Recipe" section follows the order of traditional Japanese table service, starting with the basic stock "dashi" to other soups, followed by sashimi, then simmered, grilled and fried dishes, salads, rice and noodle dishes, and finishing with a section on pickles. With attractive use of simple natural garnishes, even a basic clear soup turns into a work of art as seen in the book's beautifully-styled photos.

"Japanese Cooking" (HP Books; $9.95, 176 pages) by Susan Fuller Slack follows the publisher's effective cookbook style that is geared to easy reading. It provides recipes with informative details on ingredients and methods to help the cook. The cookbook very well reflects the author's four-year residence in Japan while traveling extensively all over the country as a military wife, studying and teaching Japanese and Chinese cooking.

Although based on Japanese tradition, the recipes, Slack says, "have been developed with an awareness of changing trends and practicality for the Western kitchen." She adds that the Japanese style of using lighter foods such as tofu, sea vegetables, fish and low-salt miso could certainly replace the high-calorie and high-cholesterol foods in the American diet.

The lavish cookbook is highlighted by a collection of pretty food set-ups, projecting freshness of foods and authenticity by way of traditional china and prop accessories. Recipes range from popular Japanese favorites such as sashimi, sushi and tempura to interesting modifications reflecting Western and Chinese cuisines. For instance, elegantly presented scallop blossoms with raspberry-sesame sauce indicates Franco-Japonica, a growing trend in Tokyo restaurants.

Aside from a glossary of ingredients and equipment, the author includes Japanese knives and cutting techniques, tips for brewing tea, chopstick etiquette and a lot of cooking tips and variations in each chapter. The section on garnishes is particularly interesting with easy-to-follow techniques.

"Practical Japanese Cooking, Easy and Elegant" (Kodansha International; $22.50, 151 pages) is written by Shizuo Tsuji and Koichiro Hata. Tsuji is president of the largest culinary school in Japan and author of the best-selling book, "Japanese Cooking: A Simple Art." Hata is head chef at the same cooking school, author of many Japanese cookbooks and television personality.

The recipes are more traditional but one gets inspired and gathers a lot of culinary guidelines just by looking at the lavish illustrations. Dark tones of meats, fish or usually non-photogenic food brighten on dainty Oriental and contemporary Western plates, with contrasting garnishes and dramatic photography. Each recipe comes with a small introduction featuring a little history, tips or serving suggestions. There is a calorie count per serving at the end of each recipe.

"Bento" or box meals of small dishes for lunch or picnics are effectively illustrated in the book, giving the reader ideas for various combinations and presentations. Finally there is a section on cooking tips and ingredients, with pictures and product detail and usage.

"The Poetical Pursuit of Food, Japanese Recipes for American Cooks" (Clarkson N. Potter; $17.95, 296 pages) is the coordinated effort of the Japanese author Sonoko Kondo with screenwriting and cinematography professor Lou. Etienne Delessert created the black-and-white drawing illustrations.

Like most books on Japanese cookery, the authors emphasize these four keys to the success of the cuisine preparation: freshness, beauty, simplicity and health. Kondo's recipes represent a seasonal variety of dishes from each of Japan's regions, which tend to vary according to climate and culture.

In cold northern Hokkaido, Kondo writes, salmon and lamb are favored by the region's farmers, fishermen and miners, as are potatoes and hearty food. Kyoto residents like "nabes," or one-pot meals, and a special Kaiseki cuisine derived from Zen Buddhist philosophy. They also tend to be vegetarians and fish-eaters. An Okinawan menu, as another instance, often begins and ends with pork.

American cooking remains popular

By TOM SIETSEMA
The Washington Post

That our interest in food is continually growing goes uncontested. Depending upon which publications you read, however, American food is enjoying a refreshing surge — or never needed a boost.

The arrival of two publications on the food desk recently illustrates the situation:

In the one court we have Art Culinaire, a hardcover quarterly food magazine whose debut issue features an article on foie gras, a profile of Spago chef-owner Wolfgang Puck and page after page of glorious, edible still lifes.

Its striking good looks and sophisticated approach make it the architectural Digest of food publications. So does its subscription price of $56 per year.

In the opposing court we have the upcoming "Real American Food," (Knopf, $18.95, October 1986) by Michael and Jane Stern, authors of "Square Meals," "Roadfood" and "Goodfood" among other books.

The Sterns, who appear to have left no church picnic unattended and no clam shack unchecked in their quest for the best of regional American fare, note in the forword of their latest publication that "we cannot agree that American cuisine is something new, or even that upscale cookery represents progress. This country's culinary past is hardly the dark ages."

Fancy or simple. Expensive or cheap. Worthy of accolades or just worth eating. However you prefer your food, we aim to appease both camps of thought with a choice of two recipes, one for grilled John Dory with basil vinaigreite from Art Culinaire, the other for a homey ham sandwich from "Real American Food."

GRILLED JOHN DORY WITH BASIL VINAIGRETTE

6 ripe Italian plum tomatoes, peeled, seeded and finely diced
2 shallots, peeled and finely chopped
3 tablespoons red wine vinegar
1-3 cup extra virgin olive oil
6 8-ounce fillets of John Dory (or substitute snapper, halibut or grouper)
Salt and pepper to taste

In a large bowl, mix basil, tomatoes, shallots, vinegar and olive oil. Stir well and adjust seasoning if needed. Brush fillets with olive oil and sprinkle with salt and pepper. Grill over hot coals until cooked but still slightly translucent in the center, since fish continues to cook off the grill. To serve, place a fillet on each plate and top with some of the sauce.

Express-lane list 2: scallions, cider vinegar, apple cider, brown sugar, tomato paste, ground cloves, boiled ham, white bread.

WEST SENECA HAM SANDWICH SAUCE
(Makes 1 1-3 cups sauce, enough for 4 sandwiches)

4 scallions, including some of the green tops, sliced thin
¼ cup (½ stick) butter
2 tablespoons flour
¼ cup cider vinegar
1 cup apple cider
¼ cup brown sugar
1 tablespoon tomato paste
Generous dash ground cloves

Saute scallions in butter until tender. Stir in flour until thoroughly mixed. Add vinegar, cider, sugar and tomato paste. Add cloves. Simmer until thick, about 5 minutes, adding more cider if too thick. Serve warm, spooned over open-face ham sandwiches.

Scientists study bean effects

PEORIA, Ill. (AP) — Scientists at a federal laboratory here hope to put an end an age-old byproduct of eating beans, by coming up with a hybrid variety that runs out of gas.

"This is a very practical study," says Dr. Tsung-Min Kuo, lead scientist in a year-old hunt for a new soybean being conducted by the U.S. Department of Agriculture's regional research lab.

"Humans have been suffering the uncomfortableness from beans for a long time," says Kuo. And his part-time partner, Dr. Walter Wolf, said people often don't know what foods harbor them.

"Soybeans are used as a meat extender, in baked goods, coffee whitener and in TV dinners," said Wolf.

Kuo explained that humans and animals lack the enzyme needed to digest two sugars that exist in high concentrations in all varieties of beans and at lesser levels in many other vegetables.

In the lower bowel, the sugars are metabolized by bacteria and ferment, creating carbon dioxide, methane and hydrogen gases. The gases, which themselves are odorless, join with other wastes and expand to the point of expulsion.

Kuo said he is searching for a flatulence-free soybean, instead of another variety, because soybeans used in a wide variety of consumer foods and as a basic livestock feed.

Late summer good time to feed lawns

Allen Wilson
Intermountain gardening

Lawns lose their color and vigor in late summer. They are not the lush dark green that they were in the spring.

August or September is an excellent time to feed lawns. Not only will it improve lawn appearance within a few days, but the benefits will last until next year.

As the days grow shorter and the night temperatures cooler, grass roots and rhizomes grow rapidly. Rhizomes are the underground stems which make turf thicker. By fertilizing now you encourage this underground growth. The lawn will be stronger going into winter and will be thicker and stronger next spring with fewer weeds. Thick turf does not leave room for weeds to grow.

I am frequently asked what is the best fertilizer for lawns. Most people would like me to name one brand. However, there are many good brands of lawn fertilizer. They will all benefit the lawn. Most lawn fertilizers have a formula of about 20-5-5. These three numbers represent the percentages of nitrogen, phosphate and potash, in that order.

Lawns use more nitrogen than anything else so there is typically three to five times as much of it as there is as phosphate and potash. Some people even use a straight nitrogen fertilizer such as ammonium sulfate for lawns. However, in the fall, lawns definitely need some phosphate and potash to stimulate underground growth. I prefer a formula with a little more phosphate and potash, such as 19-5-5 or 12. The actual percentages can vary as long as the balance is similar to one of the above formulas.

Some lawn fertilizers also contain iron and sulfur. Although not absolutely necessary, both are very beneficial to lawns. Iron in particular stimulates dark green color. The sulfur makes the soil less alkaline which helps release other minerals which are already in the soil.

If you have a lot of weeds in your lawn, you can use a combination weed and feed product. However, if you only have a few weeds, it is probably easier to spray with a spot sprayer.

Unless you use a weed and feed product, you will need to water the lawn right after fertilizing. Fertilizer can burn grass if applied too heavily or if it is not washed off the leaves.

If you would rather avoid all the work of fertilizing, lawn service companies can apply fertilizer for you.

Allen Wilson teaches horticulture at Ricks College.

Arches brighten a walkway

By HENRY MITCHELL
The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — Things rarely turn out in gardening (as in life) quite as expected, so I am only moderately hopeful of my new scheme to throw arches here and there along the walk from the kitchen to the garbage cans (beyond the wooden door that ends the walk).

The arches are one-inch tubular steel, each comprising two arched tubes connected by 10 side struts of PVC, a sort of plastic. The steel tubes are also covered with green PVC at the factory. Each arch comes in 74 pieces and requires about an hour to assemble, no tools needed.

Mine are eight feet high, five feet wide, and cost $68 counting shipping from the Kinsman Co. Inc., River Road, Point Pleasant, Pa. 18950. They strike me as efficient, nonmassive, reasonable in design and likely to last for some years.

They also come eight feet high but only 39 inches wide, for narrower walks or situations in which that width is wanted, as over a small wall fountain, etc., and they can be assembled as narrow arches 19 inches thick, or in multiples of 39 inches to form a pleached alley or arbor of any desired length. I mention the firm, contrary to usual practice, because over the years people have asked me about arches and I have never found any that struck me as suitable before. Of course if you can find somebody to make them for you of angle iron or iron pipe, that would be splendid, but having somebody whip up a few arches for you at a less than ransom price is easier thought of than accomplished.

In France I was bowled over by the great arches over the walkways of the Roserale de l'Hay south of Paris. The arches there are of angle iron, 12 feet wide and eight feet high, the arch being segmental or flattened. Sometimes they planted the same rose on each leg of the arches, sometimes two of contrasting color.

The most spectacular rambler of that garden is "Mrs. F.W. Flight," an English rose of Edwardian times, a fairly bright pink, in cantaloupe-sized clusters. I know of no source for this rose in America. Spectacular effects are had from successive arches covered with common things like "Paul's Scarlet Climber" and "Evangeline," a red rambler, and "Thalia," a spectacular white rambler, each small-flowered in clusters; a few of them, like "Thalia," are fragrant.

So I gave much thought to my choice of roses for my arches, having no great confidence the effect will be good, but at least including roses I am keen to have.

The first arch will be given to "Seagull," a rose of the early 1900s, white rambler, well-scented and more than usually vigorous.

Create new clothes designs

From BETTER HOMES AND GARDENS

You can create one-of-a-kind clothing with the addition of criss-stitched designs on garments, says Needlecraft Ideas.

It's easy to personalize clothes by stitching favorite designs to collars, cuffs, pockets, sleeves or yokes. If you prefer, create unique border designs on skirts and dresses.

A simple method for cross-stitching on clothing is to use a transfer design that is ironed on a garment.

To transfer the design, cut it from the sheet, allowing an inch or two for securing it in place. Pin the transfer with the printed side down to the fabric. Then press over the paper with a hot iron to make the imprint of the design on the material.

Using enough strands of embroidery floss to cover the transfer markings, stitch over the lines working the top stitch of each cross-stitch in the same direction throughout. Stitch the design before or after the piece is made.

You can also use even-weave fabric for counted cross-stitch embroidery.

For clothing, select a pattern with an insert piece that can be made from a contrasting fabric. Patterns that have yokes, collars, pockets or cuffs are easily adapted to make use of even-weave fabric inserts.

The Generics, our 14- and 15-year-old girls softball team, placed fifth at the Idaho State Softball Tournament in Pocatello and also received the Sportsmanship Trophy. We were also the Twin Falls International League's first place team and won the championship.

Thanks to the following businesses for their donations that sent us to the state tournament: First Federal Savings and Loan, Twin Falls Bank and Trust, First Security Bank, O.K. Paving Inc., Circle K at Addison and Eastland, Mr. Robert C. Paine, Slim's Gas, and the Twin Falls Softball Association.

Also, we would like to thank our coach, Ron Dabney, who gave of his time to coach us the last three years.

Donations sought to help with band shirts

One of the improvements this year was the band appearance. For the first time, all members wore the same band shirts. Twin Falls, Post No. 7, The American Legion on Aug. 12 voted to forward $100 to help defray the cost of these shirts, which cost approximately $524 and would normally have to be paid out of the very limited budget appropriated by the city of Twin Falls.

The American Legion would like to see others who appreciate our band make contributions to complete the payment for the shirts. The American Legion would like to express their appreciation to the band, the city council and the media for another year of concerts in the park.

Travelers thankful for honest mechanics

While traveling through your area last month, our vehicle broke down at the Jerome KOA. The good people there referred us to Fred Kenyon and Steve King of K-N-K Automotive-n-Welding in Twin Falls for help.

Fred and Steve personally drove out to the KOA bringing with them the new fuel pump we needed. But that's not the end of the story. One week later in Salt Lake City, the very same fuel pump quit working. We had to get another. Once home, I had a fuel pump that was of no good to me, so I sent it back to Fred and Steve explaining what had happened.

Today I received a check, a refund for the fuel pump along with a letter apologizing for the problem (it wasn't their fault) and wishing us a better trip in the future.

What can we say? Twin Falls is fortunate indeed, to have a pair of businessmen as Fred and Steve are in their community. Thank you much.

Wide support made water show a big hit

Thank you so much for making our water show a big success.

All these people made this possible: Radio Shack for all the equipment, all the work; Ken, what you and your wife did for me and the many hours with your set up; Holiday Inn, Virgil, Callie, Beverley, to make sure everything was set up, and the crew for all the chairs; KMVT, Penny Maine, Doug Maughn; Times-News, thank you for pictures and write-ups; East Side Chronicle; all the radio stations; John and Rosie Astorquia for filming my show; the parents; all my girls that made the show; the support of the people who came to the show.

Also, without Michele and Suzette Tegan helping me with the girls, I couldn't have made it turn out the way it did. Thank you.

They are going to perform in Buhl Aug. 16 at 7 p.m.

Motorists appreciate action by local shop

On our way to Canada from Yuma, Ariz., we began to have problems that indicated vapor lock. We spent about $350 for mechanical work in Ely and Wells, Nev., with the results being that our 25-foot motor home was in worse shape than it was before work was done on it. We were so disgusted that we were ready to turn around and forget the trip.

We decided to try to make it to Twin Falls. When we arrived, John at Latham Dodge referred us to Curt's Car Care, 1811 Addison Ave. East. Curt's Care Care was very helpful and took care of our problem within a couple of hours, even though it was Friday afternoon. Not ony did they do a terrific job, but the price was more than reasonable.

Our trip took us to many places, and we had no problems.

It is very gratifying to know that there are still competent, honest mechanics out there somewhere. Again, thanks to Curt's Car Care for making our trip through Canada a very enjoyable one. Twin Falls is a nice city with nice people.

Story on reunion stirs pleasant memories

The other day I received a copy of an article that appeared recently in your newspaper, noting the 23rd annual reunion of the Rogerson (Coffee Shop) Restaurant Giants.

The item brought back floods of summertime childhood memories and saved me from a life of ridicule at the hands of my four daughters.

For years, I have extolled the virtues of Twin Falls Little League baseball and bragged about my playing days with the legendary Giants. However, having moved away some 25 years ago, all of my wild tales of great feats, greater accomplishments, and our winning record have been constantly met with something less than a stare of disbelief at the size of my imagination.

Now, thanks to you, those girls have seen in black and white that the Giants did exist, that they did win all those games, and that, yes indeed, their dad did play with them. No longer does Twin Falls seem as far away from Las Vegas as it used to.

Anniversaries

The Cunninghams

Sylvia and Smokey Cunningham

TWIN FALLS — Mr. and Mrs. L.L. (Smokey) Cunningham, Twin Falls, celebrated their golden wedding anniversary Aug. 17 with a family picnic at the home of their son-in-law and daughter, Aub and LaDora Owens, Twin Falls.

Cunningham and Sylvia Enoch were married Aug. 22, 1936, in Twin Falls and have lived here for many years. He is a retired city fireman and she worked for George K's for several years.

The couple has three children: Lorraine Molyneux, Kimberly; Lee Cunningham, Jackpot, Nev.; and LaDora Owens, Twin Falls. They have nine grandchildren and six great-grandchildren.

The Haroldsens

Earl and Helen Haroldsen

Haroldsen and Helen Curran were married April 27, 1936, in the LDS Temple in Salt Lake City. They have lived the past 30 years in Twin Falls. He is retired from the Idaho Power Co., where he served as division manager. She has been active in many civic organizations and is past president of the Twin Falls PTA Council and the League of Women Voters.

The Haroldsens marked their anniversary last spring with a 25-day trip to China. The August family gathering included a dinner at George K's restaurant, a float trip on the Snake River, water skiing, horseback riding and other activities. Mrs. Haroldsen's mother, Mrs. H.D. Curran, Twin Falls, 93, was a special guest.

The couple's children are Judy Bennett, Pleasanton, Calif.; Douglas Haroldsen, Troy, Mich; Karen Myers, Caldwell; and Gene Haroldsen, Moreno Valley.

Victims must speak up for themselves

Abigail VanBuren
Dear Abby

DEAR ABBY: What can you do for those of us who find ourselves being "robbed" in a new way? In the last two weeks, I've been to a concert, a movie, a Protestant wedding and to my own place of worship — a Catholic Mass. I was robbed.

The worst was in church, where I found it necessary to pray fervently the entire time to keep from behaving in an uncharitable manner that would have been at odds with the very purpose of attending church. In each instance, I was seated near people who whispered, talked and giggled with an utter disregard for those around them.

I protested once in the movies and once at a concert to the noisemakers, who robbed me of my concentration. My complaints were rudely ignored. Now, rather than complain, I have given up with the passive majority who find it impossible to deal with that kind of robbery.

Smokers who used to rob non-smokers of clean air have been stopped for the most part, Abby. Will you please speak up for those of us who have paid good money to attend a movie but are not allowed to enjoy it?

Or worse yet, those who wish to worship in peace without becoming angry with a brother?

Dear, Dear Abby, speak up, please. So many of us need you.

— SILENCE, PLEASE!

DEAR SILENCE: Sorry, each of us who feels "robbed" must do his own speaking up. At a theater or concert, report the offenders to an usher or the manager. And if no action is taken, demand that your money be refunded.

In church, complain to church authorities. Obviously, parents should teach their children in the cradle respect and consideration for others.

Failure to do so breeds selfish, inconsiderate people who create disturbances in public places. Then, because people like you give up and accept that kind of behavior as something that must be tolerated, the meek shall inherit the earth populated with rude and inconsiderate people.

DEAR ABBY: I am worried about how to handle a situation that is coming up soon. My uncle is coming to visit us, and although he is a nice, older gentleman, he has some very bad grooming habits. He does not bathe often enough, and he uses no deodorant.

How do you suggest I handle this? He always reads your column. Will you please spell it out?

— SMELLBOUND

DEAR SMELLBOUND: Tell your uncle, lovingly, that a daily shower or bath and a fresh change of clothes is the rule in your house. And if he argues — show him this letter. Whew!

DEAR ABBY: You advised an overweight woman to say, "Thank you," to people who came up to her and said, "My, but you have a pretty face; you really should do something about your weight." I agree with you 100 percent.

How would you like to have someone come up to you and say, "My, but you have a beautiful figure; you really should do something about your face"?

Economists fear overhaul will slow growth

By MICHAEL WINES
Los Angeles Times

WASHINGTON — Key economists predict the tax overhaul plan approved by congressional negotiators initially would depress the nation's economic growth, make industries less likely to build or modernize factories and make some business less competitive — all sour news in a year of trade deficits and stagnant output.

The first-year pain, they said, is an unpleasant side effect of the most convulsive tax change in decades — a $24 billion-a-year shift of the tax burden from consumers to businesses, and the effective rewriting of a tax law barnacled with 73 years of loopholes, incentives and breaks.

But in a preview of the debate over the new tax package, economists split deeply over whether the nation would shake off the first-year pains of withdrawal from the old tax code, and eventually benefit, or whether the downturn would develop into a more serious, long-term slide in growth.

The answer, they said, lies partly in what consumers do with the $121.7 billion in tax cuts they would receive over the next five years should Congress approve the plan, as most observers anticipate. Skeptics fear that they will spend it on foreign-made goods instead of saving it. Additional savings would free more money for business investment at home.

Equally important is whether the tax plan will deliver on one of its primary selling points: a pledge once again to make the economy a system in which profitability — and not a crafty tax lawyer — brings success at year's end.

Several prominent economists said Monday that the legislation could have the opposite effect. Data Resources Inc., a Massachusetts forecasting company, predicts that the bill, by denying business some cherished investment tax breaks, will push up the cost of raising investment capital by 10 percent to 15 percent. That in turn will discourage modernization and leave American industry less productive than it would otherwise be.

"We estimate that this bill, by 1990, will reduce the annual output of an average employee (in goods produced) by something like $500, compared to where it would have been. That's still rising, but less than under present law," said Roger Brinner, senior economist at Data Resources.

Most taxpayers can anticipate lower taxes

By JIM LUTHER
The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The compromise tax-overhaul bill put together by congressional negotiators Saturday night would affect every taxpayer in the country as well as many individuals and corporations who have been able to legally dodge the Internal Revenue Service.

It would cut taxes for most people but raise them for several million others. About 13 million couples and individuals would find it to their advantage to stop itemizing deductions and, thus, the plan would mean simplification for them. Others would find new complexities.

Here are some key provisions:

RATES: In 1988, the present 15 taxable brackets for single people, 14 for couples filing a joint return, would be compressed into two basic brackets and the present rates (ranging from 11 percent to 50 percent) would be changed to 15 percent for three-quarters of taxpayers and 28 percent for most of the others. But single people with taxable incomes (after exemptions and deductions) above about $43,140 and couples above $71,900 would pay 33 percent or more on part of their earnings. For 1987 only, the top rate would be 38.5 percent.

For joint returns, the 15 percent rate would apply to taxable income up to $29,750, when the 28 percent rate would trigger; for singles, above $17,850.

EXEMPTIONS: Now $1,080 for each taxpayer, spouse and dependent, personal exemptions would be raised to $1,900 in 1987, $1,950 in 1988 and $2,000 (adjusted annually for inflation) in 1989. Upper-Income people would gradually lose their exemptions as earnings rise. Extra exemptions for blind and elderly would end.

STANDARD DEDUCTIONS: This benefit for those who do not itemize deductions, now $2,480 for singles and $3,670 for joint returns, would be increased next year by the rate of this year's inflation and in 1988 would go to $3,000 and $5,000. The deduction for heads of household would rise to $4,400 in 1988; for married individuals filing separately, to $2,500. A blind or elderly single person would get an additional $750 deduction or, if married, an extra $600, starting Jan. 1, 1987.

TWO-EARNER COUPLES: The special "marriage penalty" deduction for two-earner couples, worth up to $3,000 a year, would end at the end of 1986.

RETIREMENT ACCOUNTS: A worker who is eligible for a company pension (or whose spouse is eligible) and earns up to $25,000 ($40,000 for a couple) could continue deducting up to $2,000 a year for an Individual Retirement Account. The deduction would drop as income rises above those levels and would end at $35,000 for a single and $50,000 for a couple. Those not qualifying for a deductible IRA could deposit up to $2,000 a year and the interest would continue tax-free until withdrawn. Workers not eligible for company pensions could have a deductible $2,000-a-year IRA regardless of income.

INTEREST: Mortgage interest on one or two homes would continue fully deductible but when the bill is fully phased in, no deduction would be permitted for consumer interest, such as credit cards and car loans. In general, interest charges for refinancing a mortgage could be deducted only if the proceeds were used for home improvement, education or medical expenses.

STATE AND LOCAL TAXES: Income and property taxes would remain fully deductible. The sales-tax deduction would end.

MISCELLANEOUS DEDUCTIONS: Including union dues and other employee business expenses, tax-return-preparation fees and job-related publications, could be written off only above a 2 percent floor. Special rules could affect gamblers, actors and the handicapped.

MEDICAL EXPENSES: Only those exceeding 7.5 percent of adjusted gross income could be deducted; the present floor is 5 percent.

FRINGE BENEFITS: Full tax exclusions would remain for employer-paid health insurance, the first $50,000 of group life insurance and $5,000 for death benefits. For the first time, farmers and other self-employed people could deduct 25 percent of the cost of health insurance.

EARNED-INCOME CREDIT: Maximum benefit of this break for working-poor families with children would be raised to $800 (it now is $550), effective in 1988. Part of the benefit would be available until income reaches $17,000.

CONTRIBUTIONS: No change in deduction for charitable gifts by itemizers, but the writeoff for non-itemizers would end. Credit for political contributions would be repealed.

UNEMPLOYMENT COMPENSATION: Fully taxed.

CAPITAL GAINS: Taxed as ordinary income for individuals and corporations, ending a long-time preference for such gains, which are profits from sale of assets held more than six months.

INCOME AVERAGING: Repealed.

PENSIONS: Most workers' pensions would have to be vested — guaranteed — after five years on the job and employer's ability to reduce pension because of Social Security coverage would be limited. The $30,000 annual limit on wages a worker may forgo if deposited by the employer in a tax-deferred pension known as a 401(k) plan would be cut to $7,000.

MINORS: All persons 5 years and older who are claimed as a dependent would have to have a Social Security number; it would have to be listed on the parent's tax return. All but $1,000 of the unearned income, such as interest, of a child under 14 would be taxed at the parent's rate if the income is from property received from the parent. Tax advantages of "Clifford trusts," in which property is turned over to a child for more than 10 years, would end.

MINIMUM TAX: This special levy

POCATELLO (AP) — Another 25 Union Pacific Railroad employees will be laid off here this week, but company officials say it's not part of a large, planned cutback.

UPRR spokesman Dick Tincher, Salt Lake City, on Monday confirmed that 18 machinists and seven others will be laid off this week. But he called it a normal monthly budgetary adjustment, and not a permanent reduction in the work force.

After a round of job reductions in Idaho, Gov. John Evans met with Union Pacific President Drew Lewis earlier this summer. Lewis said there were no plans for major cutbacks in the railroad's Pocatello and Nampa operations.

Tincher said there is little connection between the layoffs and Lewis' talk with Evans. Evans and Lewis met for 45 minutes in Omaha, Neb., on July 29. At that time, Lewis assured Evans that the railroad will maintain "a strong presence" in Idaho.

Despite this week's round of layoffs, Tincher said he believes Lewis' comments still hold true.

"We constantly adjust our work force," he said. "I doubt that these are permanent type of layoffs."

He's running bar, golf course, foundry

Uncle Sam becomes entrepreneur

By WILLIAM C. HIDLAY
The Associated Press

CHICAGO — A reggae bar, a Wisconsin foundry and a Michigan golf course that were seized from reputed drug traffickers are still open for business under new management: Uncle Sam.

The U.S. Marshals Service runs 18 businesses nationwide after seizing the companies under a 2½-year-old federal law, said Frank DeLizza, forfeiture management officer for the service's Midwest region.

The ventures include the Thornapple Creek Golf Course near Kalamazoo, Mich., and the Wild Hare Singing Armadillo Frog Sanctuary, a reggae music bar on Chicago's North Side, he said Saturday.

Sales at one business, the Accurate Brass and Aluminum Factory in Waukesha, Wis., have even improved by 28 percent since the government took over 10 months ago, he said.

Under the National Asset Seizure and Forfeiture Program, the federal government has made well-publicized efforts to confiscate and sell property and assets purchased with drug-trafficking profits.

The law also allows the Marshals Service to take over businesses run by drug traffickers and continue operating them, DeLizza said.

"If the business is viable, provides a service to people and has an economic impact on the community, we try to keep it open," he said.

"It reduces our costs because when the business is open, it supports itself rather than us mothballing the place and hiring security guards to protect it," he said.

Carroll Spiller, forfeiture management supervisor for the district which includes the Midwest, said the Marshals Service oversees the businesses while hiring someone knowledgeable to handle daily operations.

The Wild Hare bar was closed for about six months after the federal government seized it, DeLizza said, adding that it was allowed to reopen a month ago after being leased to members of a reggae band that played there.

However, some neighborhood residents have complained that the bar is "a little rowdy and noisy at night," alleging that some customers also smoke marijuana there, he said.

"So, we're taking another look at it," DeLizza said. "If it's not being run properly, we have the right in our lease to close it down."

In the Midwest, the Waukesha, Wis. foundry has been the federal government's biggest business success story, he said.

The government seized the company last November after uncovering evidence that its owner, who is facing trafficking charges, "was stripping the plant and selling off its assets," DeLizza said.

"Our audit showed the plant probably would have been bankrupt in two months if we hadn't taken it over," he said.

Since then, the company's sales have risen to an estimated $2.5 million for 1986 and its board of directors, comprised of DeLizza and two marshals, are considering a 3 percent to 5 percent pay raise for the foundry's 45 employees.

The foundry's success illustrates the potential benefit of the forefeiture program, DeLizza said.

"We're after dope dealers, but we don't want to hurt innocent people just because they happened to be working for the wrong guy," he said.

"If we didn't reopen that foundry, 45 people would have been laid off in an area where they're a little pressed for jobs," he said. "We're also paying taxes to the federal and state governments."

Equipment failure costs reports

An interruption in wire service transmissions resulting from failure of an item of electronic equipment resulted in loss of Tuesday's New York Stock Exchange listings and most other market quotations usually carried in The Times-News.

Some other news transmissions were also lost as well before the wire was restored early Tuesday evening.

Schemes preying on businesses abound across the nation

I received a phone call at my home office in downtown Manhattan about six weeks ago from a salesman offering me subscriptions to several popular magazines at a fair price and promising me that my payments would be used to help veterans of Vietnam.

I'm listed in the phone book under my husband's name; no one who knew me would try to sell me magazines by phone or any other means, anyway.

Informed as I am about the swindlers crawling out of the woodwork these days, I settled in my chair, prepared to listen, be courteous, get as much information as I could.

I was right: The money I sent to a post office number has disappeared. It's now six weeks and no magazines have appeared and I know none will. My beneficiaries have been the crooks, not the veterans of any war. What I do have is the basis for another warning to you: BEWARE!

You may get a phone call from a salesperson offering to sell you IBM or Xerox supplies cheaper than anyone else; the supplies are not IBM or Xerox products. Or the salesperson may promise to imprint hundreds of fountain pens with your company's name — plus a bonus to you or a trip to the Bahamas. These pens can be the most expensive writing instruments you ever bought.

My favorite is the phony invoice. They appear so real and piled up along with your other bills can be paid just as promptly. When and if you actually decipher the letters squashed together across the top of the invoice, you are horrified to discover that it says something to the effect that "This is a solicitation." Now try to get your money back.

A variation of this is the actual delivery of office supplies, which your office manager insists she did not order. Yet here they are. And the company refuses to take back the supplies.

All these schemes are familiar to the Better Business Bureau of metropolitan New York and other BBBs throughout the nation. Complaints range from the receipt of unsolicited merchandise to irritating phone calls to oral misrepresentation. The companies making these offers are creative.

Solicitations include office supply schemes; offering advertising space in newspapers or in business directories that don't exist; offering magazines with free vacations; even sending a "Final Notice" for a power sport motorboat, complete with motor that you've won as a prize. This "motorboat," a rubber dinghy, was found to be worth less than the $95 cost of shipping, handling and insurance charges.

Part of your protection is being aware of the more common characteristics of what may be a scheme against business. Be on guard against the "too good to be true" syndrome, high-pressure sales tactics, insistence on an immediate decision, and a refusal to answer your reasonable questions. If this company wants your business, why should it want to hide any request for information from you?

Don't you, as a reputable business owner or manager, answer pertinent questions?

Just knowing what questions to ask and what devices to avoid can be a major guard against those not as scrupulous as you.

- Refuse to make any commitment, especially over the phone, with people you do not know.
- Ask that all requests be in writing, on the company's stationery.
- When dealing with publications, request verifiable circulation figures, the name of the publisher, sample copies of the publication.
- Centralize the control of invoices, supply and repair orders.
- Compare the price and quality of products with those offered by another supplier if you are offered a wonderful deal by an unknown salesperson. It may not be as wonderful as you think.

And as always, request information on the company soliciting you from your Better Business Bureau. The BBBs were created to safeguard you as well as their own members from swindlers.

Depress

The gloom was echoed by Allan Meltzer, a political economist at Carnegie Mellon University in Pittsburgh. "This bill encourages us to solve our competitive problems not by more investment and production, but by more consumption," he said. "Those industries in which we're not now competitive are going to be at an even greater disadvantage."

But other nationally recognized economists said that fears of a tax-inspired economic downturn are groundless beyond the first year or two of the new tax system. They predicted instead that the tax overhaul eventually would boost both consumer spending and saving, giving a double dose of economic tonic to underused factories and their workers.

And they forecast that the abolition of much-abused corporate tax breaks would force business to spend its money more often on ventures that actually turn a profit, instead of those which simply avoid taxes.

"It's strange to hear arguments that you can increase incentives to work, increase individual incentives to save, lower interest rates and improve the allocation of resources — and that all this is supposed to hurt the economy," said Walter Heller, a University of Minnesota economics professor who was the top economic adviser to presidents Kennedy and Johnson.

As an example of waste under present tax laws, Heller and others cited the billions of dollars in empty office space in many large U.S. cities — the product of a building boom partly fueled by overly generous breaks in the 1981 tax-revision law.

"Sure, it's going to cause some disruptions," Heller said. "But I think one has to look beyond the period of economic adjustment and ask whether we're going to have a better balanced economy as a result of tax reform. And the answer is unequivocally yes."

The division among experts over the likely impact of the tax law more or less mirrors the Republican-Democratic split that once threatened to torpedo negotiations on a final tax package this summer.

Democrats led by House Ways and Means Committee chairman Dan Rostenkowski, D-Ill., argued that closing business loopholes and lowering taxes on the middle class and poor would make the tax code fairer and spur spending that would stimulate the economy.

But some Senate Republicans, including John Danforth, R-Mo., and Malcolm Wallop, R-Wyo., said the $120 billion in increased business taxes would raise the prices of American goods, worsen the trade deficit, and eventually close factories and raise unemployment.

Danforth and Wallop, both of whom voted against the final compromise, lost the battle. Whether their view will eventually prevail, should the bill become law, is not known.

Nor is it likely to be until the law has been in effect for some time. The proposed overhaul of the income tax is an economic experiment unlike any since the tax itself was first levied in 1913. Experts on both sides say there is no past record by which to judge its impact.

Tax

on high-income investors and corporations that use so many deductions and credits that they pay little or no tax would be toughened considerably and applied at a 20 percent rate. Interest on newly acquired municipal bonds issued for non-government projects would be subject to the tax for the first time.

MEALS AND ENTERTAINMENT: Deductions for business-related meals and entertainment, including sports tickets, now fully deductible, would be cut to 80 percent of the cost.

DIVIDENDS: The $100-per-person ($200-per-couple) exclusion for dividends received would end.

INVESTMENT CREDIT: This major investment incentive would be repealed.

DEPRECIATION: Reduced slightly from present law. Generally, the benefit would drop for buildings while rising for machinery.

CORPORATE RATES: Top rate of 46 percent would drop to 34 percent with lower rates for small business.

TAX SHELTERS: It would be more difficult to shield wages and fees from taxes by using deductions from investments built around limited partnerships, especially in real estate. Deductions arising from most investments, including real estate, would be limited to amount risked. Losses from partnership investments could not offset wages and other income; a person actively involved in managing rental real estate could offset up to $25,000 a year.

OIL AND GAS: The industry generally would be exempt from a new anti-shelter rule affecting losses from passive investments and would retain most of the benefit associated with the depletion allowance and the quick writeoff of certain drilling costs.

TIMBER: Incentives for reforestation and quick deduction of expenses in planting and maintaining seedlings would be retained but the industry would feel the loss of capital-gains preferences more than most.

BONDS: States, cities and counties would retain right to issue tax-exempt bonds for public projects but use of bonds for private projects, such as sports and parking facilities, would be restricted.

FARMING: Quick writeoff of soil- and water-conservation and land-clearing expenditures would be repealed. Farmers' ability to deduct cost of feed, fertilizer and other supplies before used would be limited.

MINING: Favorable treatment of depletion and of costs of exploration and development would be retained but capital-gains preference for royalty income would be lost.

THE ACES®

BOBBY WOLFF

— Juvenal

There are times when a player would be better off had he held few or no high cards than those actually dealt to him. Today's club suit offers a good example.

South took dummy's diamond ace and drew trumps. Next, he played three rounds of spades, hoping for an even break. When they didn't break, South conceded a diamond and ruffed a third round. When he led a club to dummy, trying for a trick in that suit, there was no right guess. The defenders got three clubs and one diamond, sending the game one down.

Try playing the game without the king and jack of clubs in dummy. Without those honors, the best chance for a 10th trick lies with a club ruff in dummy, and South has little trouble finding success.

The same goes for the actual layout. At trick two, dummy's club jack is led to East's queen, and the defenders take a diamond and switch to trumps. Dummy's ace wins and dummy's club king goes to East's ace. South wins the second trump lead, ruffs his third club and collects his 10th trick without the need for a spade break or club finesse.

ANSWER: Two spades. An awkward hand. It's not normal to raise opener's second suit with only three trumps. In today's case, it's a least-of-evils choice.

THE ACES®

BOBBY WOLFF

— Juvenal.

There are times when a player would be better off had he held few high cards than those actually dealt to him. Today's club suit offers a good example.

South took dummy's diamond ace and drew trumps. Next, he played three rounds of spades, hoping for an even break. When they didn't break, South conceded a diamond and ruffed a third round. When he led a club to dummy, trying for a trick in that suit, there was no right guess. The defenders got three clubs and one diamond, sending the game one down.

Try playing the game without the king and jack of clubs in dummy. Without those honors, the best chance for a 10th trick lies with a club ruff in dummy, and South has little trouble finding success.

The same goes for the actual layout. At trick two, dummy's club jack is led to East's queen, and the defenders take a diamond and switch to trumps. Dummy's ace wins and dummy's club king goes to East's ace. South wins the second trump lead, ruffs his third club and collects his 10th trick without the need for a spade break or club guess.

ANSWER: Two spades. An awkward hand. It's not normal to raise opener's second suit with only three trumps. In today's case, it's a least-of-evils choice.
